Special Notice to the Afflicted.

M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M. D., M. C. P. S. D.,

Formerly of Detroit, Michigan, and for 14 years proprietor of the Detroit Throat and Lung Institute, continues to treat all the various diseases of the Throat and Chest, 275 North Main street, Los Angeles, California. His Spray or Inhaling system is the only true one.

All diseases of the respiratory organs treated by the most improved medicated inhalations, thus bringing the remedies into direct contact with the diseased parts. These are all cases combined with proper constitutional remedies for the liver, stomach, nervous system and blood.

CONSUMPTION.

The early symptoms of this disease are a sense of weariness upon little exertion, and disposition to occasionally partake of cold bits, a peculiar sensitiveness of the effects of cold and a shortness of breath upon moving gal ily or ascending a hill or stairs, also a slight hacking cough, with or without expectoration. Rising pains in the shoulders, under back, or under the shoulder blades. The symptoms are worse for colds or during the night; slight fever in the afternoon, cold feet and hands, and in many cases a blue lividity of the lips and roots of the finger nails.

The young and advanced symptoms are wasting of flesh, diarrhœa, chills and fever, night sweats, expectoration of yellow pus from the mucus or cavities in the lungs, and the hair without a depression of the chest, increasing weakness, and at last a closing up of the air passages of the lungs, causing strangulation or suffocation of the patient for want of power to spectorate the mucous from the lungs.

Heretofore the treatment of consumption has been unsatisfactory, both to physicians and their patients, because but little, since the discovery of the Arsenic system of Price, a few years ago, thousands of cases have been completely cured, which had not been by the old system of practice, utter failure to combat the evil or the disease would have continued to the last pre stage. The use of Medicated Inhalations is the only means by which these diseases can be cured. By this means we are enabled to dissolve the hardened mucous in the lungs, cast the cough, facilitate expectoration, heal the ulcers and cavities and arrest after all hopes of cure by the ordinary methods is past.

CONSULTATION FREE.

Those who desire to consult me in regard to their cases had better call at my office for an examination, as it is impossible, in fact impossible, to write for a list of questions and Medical Treatise. Address

At Last!

It is all over, and Blaine, our great leader, is defeated. Now, for the first time since the great struggle began, we see full reason for conceding Cleveland's election. By a very slim plurality—less than one per cent. of the entire popular vote cast—the Democratic candidate has carried the State of New York and is elected President. In common with Republicans everywhere, we accept the result cheerfully, courageously. We bow to the will of the people. Republicans can gracefully submit to reverses, if need be; they are capable of taking their medicine, bitter though it is. They will not imitate the wicked example of the disloyal Democracy in 1860, when, with arms in their hands, they resisted the legally-expressed will of the people and made war on the Government rather than submit to the benign rule of the great-hearted and good Lincoln.

We submit to the inevitable, not acknowledging, however, that our cause or our candidate have been overthrown by legitimate methods. The Republican party and its grand chieftain have sustained an undeserved defeat, the causes for which are plain to all men. We do not here and now go into the enumeration or the discussion thereof. It is enough to say now that treachery in our own camp and wicked and lawless methods in the camp of the common enemy and his perfidious allies are the causes of our defeat.

The cause is not lost; the Republican party is defeated but not conquered; it lives, and lives to fight another day; it will win in the end, because its principles are undying.

RUN UP THE OLD FLAG!

WHO is the coming Postmaster of Los Angeles?

IS Duke Gwin to sw ing the patronage of the Pacific Coast? Hardly!

THE Chicago Inter-Ocean expresses to a dot our sentiments touching the result.

IN the First District the contest between Carothers (R.) and Henley (D.) is still not certainly decided.

THE party of "purity," the Prohibitionists, are gloating over their great victory with Grover Cleveland.

HORIZONTAL BILL MORRISON was elected two years ago by 2800 majority. He is re-elected by a majority of less than 800.

WHEN they consider how disastrously they have been driven from power at home, the Democrats of Los Angeles county should go slow in the yelling business.

IT was a cheerful sight to see the Prohibitionists, the brevet Democrats, stand around the streets and hug themselves with delight over the supposed election of such a man as Cleveland over the brilliant statesman, Blaine. Curious cattle, these Prohibitionists.

"WATER and Whiskey don't Mix" was one of the transparencies carried in the Democratic procession last night. But they do mix, for the pure and saintly cold-water men have joined hands with the party whose chief inspiration, according to one of their principal speakers, is whiskey.

SEVERAL of our contemporaries, particularly those of the Democratic breed, are industriously publishing the statement that Mr. Blaine is seriously ill. It is possibly true, but we have as yet seen no confirmation of the statement. Blaine still lives, and may the Plumed Knight live long years yet!

CONKLING thinks that Arthur will be a Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1888. Of course, if he is, he will be nominated and elected. Oh, yes! the friends of the betrayed and sacrificed Blaine will rush to his support with tremendous energy and overmastering enthusiasm.

BLAINE'S majority in Illinois falls behind that of Garfield's just about to the extent of the Prohibition vote that was fooled into supporting the hypocritical Judas, St. John, who was working for Cleveland, and it is reported has received $30,000 of rum-

Our Boys and Girls.

The Boy and the Wolf

O, once there was a lazy lad,
And full of mischief too,
The only son his father had.
Yet nothing would he do.

If father sent him for the cows
He'd surely stop and play,
And loiter on till after dark,
With children by the way.

Early with their kling, clang, klingle,
Adown the village lane,
With drowsy little jangle,
The other cow-bell's came,

On necks of brown-eyed cattle
Good boys were driving home,
But this boy's cow-bell's rattle
Stirred not till night had come.

If to school his father sent him,
He was sure to run away,
And play the naughty truant
Almost every sunny day.

Till his father grew discouraged,
And sadly shook his head,
As he said unto his mother,
"Jack will never earn his bread.

"I will send him to the pasture,
On the hillside's rocky steep,
And through all the days of summer
He shall tend my flocks of sheep.

That, the bad boy said, was jolly,
For not much he'd have to do,
With the shepherd dog beside him,
He could rest the whole day through.

And, at first, he thought 'twas pleasant,
Lying there upon the ground,
In the green tree's leafy shadow,
And the gentle sheep around.

But he soon grew tired and lonely,
For his playmates never came,
And the jangle of the sheep-bell,
Sounded every day the same.

And no sound he heard beside it,
Save the robin and the bee,
And upon the hillside lonely
Not a moving thing could see

Save the sheep and dog beside him,
Or the shadow of a wing,
So he fell to plotting mischief—
Easy thing it was for him.

Down the hillside swiftly running,
Soon he reached the village street,
And he cried with voice of terror,
As he ran with hasty feet—

"Wolf, a wolf, O come and help me"
And the kindly people came,
The tailor from his workshop,
And the farmer from his grain;

And the blacksmith seized his hammer,
And the hunter seized his gun,
For his spade the gardener hasted,
And his stave the cooper swung;

And from every door the people
Came rushing out so fast—
With hurrying feet they joined the crowd,
Till the hill was reached at last.

On the hill the flocks were feeding
Amid the fresh green grass,
With not so much as a wolf's footprint
Along the way they passed.

The chest was plain; they went away
Back to their work again,
But never, never will you find
An angrier crowd of men.

But the boy he laughed till his sides
were sore,
At he thought of the trick he'd played—
Of the rush and hurry and frightened looks
That his false wolf cry had made.

But not long after, as he lay
In the grass on his lazy back,
He saw the eyes of a hungry wolf,
And it behind it a snarling pack

Of famished wolves, with lolling tongues
And bloodshot eyes, whose fame
Filled hi t wi h terror as he leaped
And fled to the town again.

"Wolf, wolf, O help!" again he cried.
But not a person stirred.
"Get out, you rascal, knave, you cheat,"
Were t e only sounds he heard.

Sad the havoc among the sheep
Made by the wolves that day,
With no shepherd boy nor shepherd dog,
To keep the beasts away.

I am sure that every boy and girl will see the moral of this wolf story. Lying and cheating will not pay in the end. The boy or girl who would be trusted must be truthful. It will not answer to tell an untruth "just for fun." Remember, there is nothing in the world so priceless as a good name. Let nothing ever tempt you to tell a lie.

You have doubtless all read of the grand old pyramids of Egypt—those wonderful buildings of stone built thousands of years ago by the Egyptian people. You find pictures of them in your geographies and histories, and doubtless have often wished that you could look upon those monuments built by the people who lived so many centuries ago.

But did you know that our own country has its pyramids as wonderful as those of Egypt, and built perhaps as many years ago?

Some have just been discovered at Senora, Mexico, which, if the truth is told about them, are as wonderful as those which lie upon the sandy banks of the Nile. There is one pyramid which rises grand and tall seven hundred and fifty feet, and around it there is a winding roadway leading from the bottom to the very top of this great pyramid. It is wide enough for carriages to pass over it, and it winds around and upward so gradually that no part of the way is steep, and you would have to travel twenty-three miles, if you started at the bottom of the pyramid, before you could reach the top, so often does the road wind round and round it. It would take you a whole day to climb to its top.

The outer walls on this carriage-way are built of huge blocks of granite, and in circles as perfect and in as regular a grade as they could be made by the best engineers in our day. In some places, where the dust is deepest, which has been gathering for centuries, blown there by the winds, great trees are growing, and small green plants, which give to the pyramid the appearance of a mountain. This structure was built by a people of whom we know nothing. History can tell us nothing about them, for they lived before history in this new world began. They may be as old as the Sphynx or as the Egyptian pyramids. They could not have been built by savages, for they show the skill and science of engineers, men as skillful as those who are now at work upon the Washington Monument at the National Capital. Perhaps sometime we may know more about them. When men have searched all through them they may find some trace of the people who built them, and who lived so many years ago in the sunny land of Mexico. Near by this pyramid is a mountain, which is of about the same height. It is covered by a kind of gypsum which is as white as snow and very thick. In this layer of stone have been found hundreds upon hundreds of rooms, some of them very large, 16x18 feet square. They are cut out of the solid stone, and the walls and the floors and ceilings are perfectly smooth and level, and the stone is so white none of the rooms are dark. The rooms have no windows, but there is an opening at the top of each room which served for a door. The rooms are about eight feet high, or about two feet higher than a very tall man. There are a good many pictures cut in the walls and hieroglyphics which no one has yet been able to read. But by and by some learned man may be able to find the key to them, and then perhaps the world will know all about the people who lived in these mountain houses, but who lived and died so long ago that they have been forgotten and even their name has been lost to men. Should you not like to know their story? I am sure that I should.

A MAD WORLD.

The Ills of Life Come Alike to Those in the Valley and Those on the Hilltop.

R. J. Burdette.]

What a jumble is the story of a day! John McCullough broken down in Chicago, Frank Chanfrau dead of paralysis in New York, Fanny Elsler dying in Vienna, and Mary Anderson celebrating her nineteenth birthday again. What an old world of surprises and contrasts it is! Otto Gerbel hangs himself in a St. Louis garret, because he had not money enough to buy a loaf of bread or a rope, and Mr. Wiltz kills himself with the expensive "limited express" because he is only worth $200,000. Nana, the drayman's daughter, sells herself to the millionaire's son for a handful of dollars, and the millionaire's daughter gives herself away to the coachman for nothing. A grandson of Henry Clay is shot dead in a drunken row in a Kentucky rum shop, and a great-grandson of Patriek Henry is arrested and fined as a common drunkard in Louisville. It's "a mad world, my masters."

Well for the man who keeps out of the whirl of its madness, who lives down in the shaded valley where he fears no fall. Where only faint echoes of the roar of the troubled ocean o human life can reach him. Where his days pass quietly by as the white clouds that sail across the blue skies that smile upon the valley. Where his nights are lulled to sleep by chirping cricket and plaintive whippoorwill. Happy the man whose brows are not crowned with the bays that wear horror and headache, fame and heartache on their fadeless greens. Happy the man who rises to his toil with the sun and who sits under his own vine and fig tree and sings with his wife and little ones when the sun goes down. Who knows of the great, wide, whirling, seething old world as the traveler passing through, or the broken soldier beaten from the wars, or the tired sinner, weary of the world that has grown tired of him, and graciously giving to God the last worthless years of a wasted life, bring vales of the world to him. Oh, happy man, far down the quiet vale! Oh, hallowed home, shadowed in dreamy peace, the tintels of the doorposts sprinkled with prayer, that the destroyer may pass over it, nor touch its peace with one breath from the great world beyond the encircling hills.

And yet I suppose the man in the valley has his troubles. The pangs and penalties of fame do not keep him awake nights, but the interest on his mortgage goes on while he sleeps. He envies not the crowned monarch his sceptre, but he may be secretly jealous of the squire. The thorns of a vaunting ambition do not line his bed, but the cracker crumbs of a defeat for road supervisor may scatter themselves therein. The plow-handles jab his ribs on the hillsides, the mists come up from the brook in the evening, there are suggestions of malaria from the low-lying meadows in the morning.

And yet—what a miserable cycle is this! There are faults in the meadow of course. And so St. Paul was a sinner, the martyrs were men and women, and there are spots on the sun. So God bless the man, the valley, the peaceful home, the long quiet life, the clondless sunrise and the deep red amber glow of the sunset.

WISE SAWS ABOUT WOMEN.

Ancient and Modern Proverbs of Fair Ones in Eastern Countries.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

Proverbs about women are common in every language, but particularly so in the East. In Japan they say: "Where the hen crows, the house goes to ruin," evidently an Eastern rendition of the gray mare, but in China, "A bustling woman and a crowing hen are neither fit for gods or men," while the Persians believe in adapting the means to the end, as indicated by the expression, "If you be cock, crow; if a hen, lay eggs."

In Russia, "It never goes well when the hen crows," and another thought is pertinently expressed in the proverb, "The wife does not beat her husband, but her temper rules him."

The Chinese, however, have perhaps the meanest saying about women ever written: "There are two good women—one dead, the other unborn."

As an expression of confidence, however, it is closely pushed by the Bengalese nation, "A perfect woman is rare: there is virgin upon a cat, or air-flowers, or rabbits' horns or tortoise hair ropes."

Woman as a wife is not less the object of proverbial attention. The Talmud says: "Though the wife be little, bow down to her;" that is, listen to her advice; while the Chinese say, "A good man will not beat his wife," a self-evident proposition, the truth of which is not affected by the Persian, "A bad wife is like a fig tree growing on the wall"—which undermines the wall by its roots.

In China "The widow is like a rudderless boat," and in Siam, "He who marries a wolf barks often to the forest."

In Russia, "A wife is not a guitar, which will be silenced when we have done with it," while in Ceylon, "A wife is like a morning flower"—to be tenderly handled.

The Talmud, however, sums up the whole case: "God did not make woman from man's head, that she should rule over him, nor from his feet, that she should be his slave; but from his side, that she should be near his heart."

ALMOST THE CRACK OF DOOM.

The Sunset Gun at Fort Wadsworth Goes on a Sunday Excursion.

From the New York Herald.]

Among the thousands of people who went to Fort Wadsworth on Sunday to enjoy the breeze and the view from the ramparts were a young couple who soon found what they evidently considered an admirable spot to sit while they looked at each other and at the narrows. This was among some shrubbery close under the big cannon which is fired at sunset.

They were still sitting there when the sun disappeared beneath the horizon and the cannon was fired, its deafening report was followed by a series of shrill feminine shrieks from the shrubbery. The young lady was frightened nearly into hysterics by the concussion so close to her ears. The next moment the shrieks grew even more wild and shrill, as the cannon pitched forward over the embankment, down among the bushes. The charge had been too heavy and had thrown the cannon out of its carriage upon the rampart, over which it had rolled. Its downward course was within a few feet of the terrified couple, who started up the slope almost as fast as the cause of their alarm was going down.

When the young lady reached the top of the embankment her hair was disevelled, her skirts were torn and her voice was all broken up, while the young man followed with his pearl-colored trousers hopelessly torn and stained with the grass, his face the color of his white shirt bosom, and his knees in a very uncertain condition. The walked hurriedly away, arm in arm, evidently fully determined not to choose Fort Wadsworth for their next Sunday's excursion.

An officer of the fort said too heavy a charge had been used in the cannon.

House and Home.

Susan Sunshine's House and Home Papers.

It is the little things of life that make and mould it, as it is the minutes which make the hours and the hours the days. Habits are not formed all at once, but it is the daily yielding to certain tendencies that fastens the chains and fixes the bent of our natures for good or for ill. The workshops of the nation are its homes. In these it is built up into strength and purity, or shaped for weakness and decay. The world has never known a noble statesman or a worthy philanthropist whose early life was not submitted to the guiding, moulding hand of a wise and good mother. It is not usually the wise mothers of our land who are reaching out after a wider sphere of action, and grasping for political place and power. They realize that woman's kingdom is the home—that her empire is within the hearts of her husband and children. To mingle in the mire of politics, and participate in the mud-slinging of a political campaign would not tend to the advancement of womanly purity, or to an increase of the respect that is now shown her by the other sex. It would only result in evil to the race.

Woman's sphere, properly understood, is no narrow one, for from a moral point of view it is almost without limitations. The wife and mother who gives to her husband and children a happy home, filled with the atmosphere of refinement, of broad culture, of sterling integrity and womanly affection, is a better apostle of humanity and a nobler benefactor to the race than all the political heroes of the ages, and through her sons and her daughters she will perpetuate all that which tends to make nations great and prosperous. A nation of such homes would embody all that is best in civilization, all that is noblest in statesmanship, all that is most desirable in government and least oppressive in power. With such a sphere should we not be content?

There is one thing that I object to in home life almost as much as to company manners; that is, the habit that is so customary in many homes of having the appointments of the table so different for ordinary, every-day use from what they are when "company" is in the house. I have met ladies of cultivation and refinement, but of limited means, who were in this respect a little careless. The economy which they found it necessary to practice was often turned in the direction of table furniture, and instead of the dainty damask and silver that was used for the transient guest, there was coarser linen, the absence of the best silver and china, and the family in their every-day life sat down to a table devoid of those delicate suggestions of refinement and taste which met the eye of the occasional guest. It is out of such practices as this that the "company manners," so objectionable and false, have their growth. The best that we have in our homes should be for the home dwellers. All the beauty that we can garner and all the best that we can command should be brought into daily use. Our surroundings have much to do in awaking refined taste in our children, if those surroundings gave none to the beautiful in its varied forms. Simplicity is not inconsistent with beauty, and wealth is not necessary in order that our homes may be made lovely and inviting.

I have seen homes that were as fair as the sunshine, and were like a symphony in colors, where perfect taste and beauty blended, and yet where the outlay was comparatively small. But the results were better than those through lavish expenditure without the aid of a refined taste.

"Annie" comes again for a chat with me, and this is what she has to say:

Susan Sunshine: The week has passed so quickly that I can hardly realize that seven days have passed since my last visit. My house is in order and the baking done, so that I feel I have spare time to chat a while. Do you know I have tried all ways, and have about concluded that the easiest way to keep my house in order is to not let it get upset. By keeping things picked up and in place and using care not to make dirt. There is no sense in making work; management will do more in a house than any amount of work. I always wear an oil-cloth apron in the kitchen. They are very useful, and save washing.

Some ladies think they are too delicate to do housework, yet they can go out shopping, and walk all over town, and then come home, tired of course, and cross and full of complaints about having to work so hard. It is generally the careless housekeeper who is always on the go, and you may be sure that she will do more talking and gossipping than she would be willing to acknowledge. And O, what a horrible practice it is! It is a habit that grows upon a person, and there is no practice so dangerous. There can be no confidence placed with safety in the talebearer, and the friend who thoughtlessly confides in such an one is sure of prompt betrayal.

I know of no better way of dealing a death-blow to the habit than by less visiting and more reading. An hour spent over a good book will give renewed ideas, and a taste for higher thought is acquired.

I must not forget to tell you about my crazy table-cover. First I took a landscape view of crotonne, eighteen inches square, to which I sewed twelve pieces, each nine inches square, all of different kinds of cretonne. The seams are covered with black velvet ribbon cross-stitched on in different colored silks, the fringe is made of coarse brown crash toweling cut lengthwise and raveled, leaving enough of the body of the goods for a heading. A little care in selecting the colors will produce a very beautiful effect. ANNE."

"Anne's" suggestions in regard to the evil habit of gossipping are worthy of consideration. What women want as an aid in the avoidance of that pernicious habit is broader culture and a wider circle of thought. Through good books we may have the companionship of the wise and great of all ages, and they will help to lift us out of the ruts to a nobler plane of charity and human sympathy. Let us struggle to reach those higher levels where our horizon shall be bounded by the infinite and eternal.

SUSAN SUNSHINE.

Of the $3,000,000 in taxes received in one day by the tax collector of New York City, the Astor family paid $425,000, the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad $450,000, James Gordon Bennett $29,500, and the Goelet estate, in part, $150,000.

A Tragedy of the Seaside.

I was down upon the seashore.
Hunting around for shells;
They jingled in the sea breeze
Like tiny little bells.

Singing in my gladness,
Throwing pebbles at the spray,
Pelting back the wavelets,
Laughing wildly in my play.

Just as my sport was over,
And the sun a-going down,
I heard a quick, light footstep,
And hastily turned around.

A noble form was standing there,
Whose dark eyes gazed in mine,
And thrilled me with strange happiness
Nay, nay, almost sublime.

And still he gazed upon me,
I thought with looks of scorn;
My lovelock hair had fallen down,
And my dress was soiled and torn.

I could not hide my blushes;
So I turned and fled away.
O, I cannot now relate the rest—
You know this is my bridal day!

SUNDAY READING.

God Wills it So.

For every cloud a silver light;
God wills it so.
For every vale, a shining height;
A glorious morn for every night;
And birth for labor's throe.
For snow's white wing, verdant field,
A gain for loss.
For buried seed, the harvest yield;
For pain, a strength, a joy revealed,
A crown for every cross.

A Picture.

The Rev. Robert Collyer says: I was in Cologne some years ago, had been wandering all day about the city, and was quite tired and very cross; for it seemed as if the whole city had made up its mind to pick my pocket. I was going to my lodging, when my guide said: "There is a picture I want you to still see." "Anything to pay!" I asked grimly. "Yes," he answered, "so much." "Then," I said, "I will not go. I am sick of the whole business and tired out, I will go home." But the man had his way after all, and I went to see the picture painted by Rubens for his own parish church. It was an altar piece, and they were ready to show it after I had paid my money. No man in this world could be more unfit than I was to see that picture. They turned it to the light, and I stood half a minute, I suppose, in the silence with the setting sun shining on it, and then I was sobbing and striving to choke back my tears. It is a terrible picture, as some of you will remember—the death of this Simon Peter on the cross with his head downward. The master never made grander work than in this picture. The pain of it smites you with a solid stroke, but the secret of its greatness is in the eyes; and these are wonderful gray eyes—the eyes of the prophet, in which the painter has hidden such deeps of glory and victory that, as I stood there amazed through the power and beauty of it, I seemed to hear the angels singing. The man was looking from the cross right into the heart of heaven. The light was more than the shining of the sun; it was the light which kindles suns—it was the light of God. He knew nothing of the pain; death had no dominion; he had fought the good fight. The curtains of time were falling, the eternal life was storming the fainting and falling spirit, and Simon Peter was already absent from the body and present with the Lord.

Leave It With God.

The sense of duty done is the brave man's solace in failure or misfortune. He has done what he could; the rest he leaves with God. The cause he believed just has been broken down; the plans he had formed have failed; the good he intended has been brought to naught before his eyes; he sees injustice prevail and wrong triumphant; but he has done his duty; and oppressed, in poverty, in disgrace, in sorrow, not for himself, but for others, or for the cause he believes right and sacred, he is still serene, for he says "The end I leave with God," and he trusts that in the future life he will see that all this failure and suffering had some good meaning which now he cannot penetrate. Holding this faith, life is still important and full of meaning to him, where otherwise extinction would be welcome; and he feels and knows that what concerned him was only to do his duty, and leave the result with God.—[Charles Nordhoff.

Earthly Influence.

How many earthly influences there are to impair our spiritual vision! The dust of prejudice or passion may secretly enter. Distracting anxiety about our earthly future may become habitual. Love of this world may take possesion of us. An old remnant of ill-will toward others may lurk in some hidden place of the soul. Some important duty we may have emitted—prayer at the family altar, the study of the living word, the consecration of our influence and means in Christ's cause. We may have gradually yielded to servile bondage, to the fear of man, to the selfish desire of human praise, to the paralyzing influence of spiritual sloth. Formalism may be our danger. Outward parade may be our fascination. But whatever weakens the interior sight is the cause of hiding truth from us so that it cannot be apprehended.

We Do Not Know.

Somewhere near you there may be some poor soul whom all the town shuns as a vagabond, who since his birth has fought desperately and sometimes in vain against inherited weaknesses, from in the blood and brain, which drive him to idleness, rags, hunger, crime. God knows the man though we turn our backs upon him. It is not the pride of place, of righteous well-doing, of spotless garments, that never were tempted into the mire, that he honors; it is the man who has fought faithfully against the heavier odds. Many a poor, despised wretch, forced into the pauper's grave by circumstances, or some taint of blood has heard the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant."—[Christian at Work.

Ampugnophy.

Greatly to be deplored are the inevitable consequences of an inordinate love of amusement, and an excessive devotion to pleasure-seeking. All that can be said in favor of merely pleasurable pursuits may be said against making them prominent among the aims of life. The most that can be claimed for them as producing "a merry heart," is that they "do good like a medicine." A medicine ceases to be beneficial, and becomes actually injurious when its use is common and habitual. A well in the desert may do more harm than good when it becomes a tarrying place to the traveler.—[The Watchman.

Judge Not.

The longer I live the less do I desire to judge any man. There is no one but God can decide as to any man's character. This is a product of so many causes—temperament, the society into which he has been cast, intellectual capacity, the teaching he has received, whether from the books he has read, the clergy (perhaps bigots, ignorant men, superstitious dogmatists, mere talkers) he has heard, and a thousand circumstances—that we dare not condemn the man, though from the light which God has given us we may say, "To me this is right" or "wrong."

The Central Fact.

Baptist Gleaner.]

The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the central fact in the universe of God, and stands between two vast eternities absorbing both; a moment of time having furnished the eternal empiry of all worlds. Since Christ was lifted up and crowned Monarch of the universe, this doctrine occupies a most exalted place, not only in the preaching of the apostles, but forms also the grand center of all Christian thoughts, at once becoming the crowning feature in the scheme of human redemption.

A Web of Mysteries.

The name of Christ is, I grant it, from one end to the other a web of mysteries; but this mysteriousness does not correspond to the difficulties which all existence contains. Let it be rejected, and the whole world is an enigma; let it be accepted, and we possess a wonderful explanation of the history of man.—[Napoleon Bonaparte.

Death.

There is no death. The grave is but a portal. It is the living that are dead, it is the dead that live. If we could but know how empty is the grave which we garnish with our flowers and water with our tears; if we could but know how narrow is the stream and how thin is the cloud-veil that separates the dead in Christ from those that live for Him a little longer; if we could but hear the voices of their love, doing in another world, unhindered by the flash, the work of redeeming love which we do so poorly; if we could but learn these lessons from this chapter of tears in the life of disciples at their Master's tomb, then sorrow as we might, it would not be as those without hope. In the deepest night faith would sing her song; in the blackest of Egyptian darkness there would still be a light in our dwellings.—[Lyman Abbott.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

Theft of the Old Dominion—Frauds in New York.

[The following news of the recent electoral contest, which reaches the TIMES by mail, contains some points already produced in our telegraphic dispatches, and others which are new, timely and interesting:]

CHICAGO, November 9.—The Inter-Ocean's Petersburg (Va.) special of November 8th says: The Democrats have stolen Virginia by a series of frauds before unknown outside of the Gulf States. Under the State law County Judges appoint Judges of Election, three for each precinct. In the strong Republican counties of Charlotte and Halifax the County Judges elected by the readjuster Legislature two years ago went with the Democrats and appointed two Democratic Judges and one Republican for each precinct. Under the law each political party has to be given representatives on each election board, but the Democratic County Judges in every case evaded this law by invariably appointing as the Republican member either a negro who could not either read or write or else some hybrid Republican who could be bought. In this way election boards were thrust upon the Republican counties of Charlotte and Halifax and others. With these judges and by the device of stuffing ballot-boxes in some precincts and using tissue ballots in others, and by denying United States Supervisors access to the polling-rooms, either during the election or during the count afterwards, Halifax, with 800 Republican majority, was carried for the Democrats.

Reliable reports show that nearly 3,000 legal Republican voters were thus disfranchised in the State. Other devices of dishonesty and trickery were employed at different points, but these methods, which cheated the Republicans out of over 8,000 votes and gained the Democrats 2,800 dishonest votes, were the principal resorts. Still, notwithstanding these great frauds, aggregating 10,000 votes for the benefit of the Democrats, the Republicans had the State when the polls closed Tuesday night. On Wednesday this fact was so universally recognized that the Democrats admitted that the State had gone Republican and no Republican doubted that Blaine had at least 4,000 majority. No Democrat in Richmond would bet on the result in the State. Senator Mahone, Colonel Brady and all the leading Republicans were sure of victory, and none of the leading Democrats disputed it here, although they kept telegraphing to New York that they had pulled through. They have pulled through and destroyed the Republican majority gained at the polls.

Despite the 10,000 votes stolen by the Democrats as above described by holding back returns in remote counties, stuffing in enough more votes since Wednesday to give them their so-called present majority, 6,000 Republicans could have suffered the loss of the 3,000 votes disfranchised through the so-called purging of the registry lists, could have stood also the robbing of the 5,000 voters gained by delaying the vote and keeping out negro voters, and could have stood also the Democratic vote of 2,800 stolen by stuffing of ballot-boxes and the tissue ballots, and still have carried the State. The Democrats saw this on Wednesday and couriers were dispatched to counties which could be manipulated, with orders to stuff 6,000 or 7,000 votes into the returns. The boldest resort to fraud before and during the election could not and did not give the Democrats success. The Republicans still had seven, Paul's election frauds were appealed to, and by this desperate method they gained what they call a majority for Cleveland. It is a burglary of a State, and the thieves propose to go and offer stolen goods to the Electoral College and expect to have them received, and with them to help make Cleveland President of the United States. The frauds have been so plain that the vote should never be accepted in the Electoral College.

General Mahone, Colonel Brady and other Republican leaders made a splendid fight for Virginia and won a triumphant victory at the polls, despite intimidation and fraud. The Democrats have stolen the State since the election. It remains to be seen whether such rascality can be made successful. Democrats here are jubilant over the thought that they have elected Cleveland and are very intolerant in their actions. Many of them are saying that Appomattox has been reversed and that the grays are on deck once more to stay. Others declare openly that none of the men now in Federal offices in Virginia, or who have held such offices, can hereafter live in the State. Many Republicans say that if Cleveland is elected they will be compelled to leave Virginia. A mob of intoxicated Democrats in Richmond yesterday pursued Deputy United States Marshal Ballard through the streets. The police told him they could not protect him and that he had better run. He saved himself by dodging into a store.

To-day a committee went from Norfolk to Richmond for the avowed purpose of giving United States Marshal Hughes a ducking. He incurred their hostility by the courage with which he sought to prevent fraud and intimidation through Deputy Marshals. In many places Democratic mobs drove Marshals from the polls. There is not a claim on the part of any Democrat that a single voter was prevented by United States Marshals from voting. The Democrats held jubilee meetings at Richmond last night. It was a scene of mad joy, and as bonfires enough could not be obtained to satisfy the crowd, a lumber yard was fired. The speeches were intemperate to the point of recklessness. One speaker said, "The South is now in control of the Government and will be reimbursed for its losses." This was the most wildly cheered utterance of the night. It struck the keynote of Southern expectation and hope. To-day in Richmond Democrats have been exceedingly abusive at every appearance of Marshal Hughes and his deputies.

When they have reorganized the Supreme Court they expect to annu the war amendments, and one Democrat said to-day: "We will not have to wait long, even if we don't reorganize the Court, as four of the present Judges will retire next year and their places will be filled by Democrats, and at least two will be from the South." The poor negroes are dazed by the reports of Cleveland's election, and stand and gape at the Democratic flags in a stricken, helpless sort of way. They will be the sufferers. Some of them of the most intelligent class said to me yesterday and to-day: "To means that our votes are to be taken away from us and that the free schools are to go."

DEMOCRATIC FRAUDS DISCOVERED IN FIFTEEN COUNTIES OF NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, November 8.—The week closes to-night with the Republican State and National committees still believing that the electoral vote of New York have been cast for Blaine and Logan. A careful examination of the returns has been in progress all day and errors and discrepancies have been discovered which cut down the alleged Cleveland plurality in a manner calculated to alarm the most sanguine Democrats, while it is a fact that discrepancies have been discovered in some instances in favor of Cleveland. It all shows that nothing is certain and cannot be so until the official vote is announced. The most important error yet discovered was in one of the districts in this city to-night where 460 votes were added to Blaine's plurality, but this is not the only one. In Queen's county, L. I., 700 votes were found to have been added to Cleveland's column after the result had been announced and the polls closed. Another incident of the confusion of affairs is reported from Westchester county, where one of the Democratic election officers went off and got drunk with his friends with the returns in his coat pocket, and was captured and brought back after the Deputy Sheriff had been on his track for several hours. Again, in one election district in Ulster county Cleveland's plurality exceeds the total registered vote of the disirict. These facts are all in the hands of the Republican National Committee, and it is safe to say they will make the most of them.

Dispatches to the committee from the upper part of the State say that Butler's votes were all counted for Cleveland. The tickets were the same size and thickness. It is alleged by Butler's managers here that the same thing was done elsewhere. The committee has received dispatches from four counties giving in substance the foregoing information. The committee has positive evidence of fraud in fifteen counties. "Do you think the Republicans have carried the State?" was asked of Secretary Fessenden of the National Republican Committee. "The Republicans have carried the State, and, according to our figures, which have been gone over very carefully, Blaine's plurality will range from 1,100 to 1,400. We feel quite cheerful over the situation. In a close election like this it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to avoid saying or doing anything of an inflammatory character. This course our National Committee has studiously pursued. No good purpose can be secured by working excitable people into a white heat. In due time the official returns will speak for themselves, and we feel certain they will speak for Blaine. Should it happen, however, that Cleveland has a plurality of votes, we shall bow to the will of the people, and will do it with a good grace." Chairman Jones said: "We have not yet surrendered and have no idea of doing so."

A TALK WITH BUTLER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—Butler reached Washington yesterday, and to-day a lengthy interview with him on the uncertainty that exists touching the election in New York appears in the Star. He says: "It is almost impossible for any set of men to foot up 1,200,000 votes separately, as cast in different precincts, without making mistakes. I feel quite certain that errors will be discovered. They may be in Cleveland's favor, or they may elect Blaine. Why, look at Massachusetts. The day after election it was given out that Blaine's plurality was 10,000, when, in fact, it was 23,000. Why, the night before last in New York an old staff officer of mine came to me, saying he had heard of a dispatch going over the wires from the Windsor Hotel, signed B. F. Jones, and advising Blaine that Cleveland had been elected. My old army friend was badly frightened until I told him that Jones was not at the Windsor Hotel. I am an old soldier and I never get scared at camp rumors."

"General, was there ever a Presidential election in this country before that depended upon so close a vote?"

"No, sir; never. In 1856 Pennsylvania was the pivotal State and Fremont was defeated. The canvassing and returning Board discovered that he did not have as many votes as there were cast for him and he was defeated. You remember that in 1876 the election was given up for two weeks, but the Republican Returning Boards ascertained that the vote was different from that cast."

"General, did your vote reach your expectations?"

"My vote was larger than I expected. You see my vote was not counted except in Michigan. It was not cast for me. My vote was a no protection vote and an Irish vote, and when it was apparent that there was danger of Cleveland's election, these men determined to vote directly for Blaine. 'A vote for me was only half a vote against Cleveland. They saw that and cast their vote for Blaine, hence I say my vote, except in Michigan, was not counted."

A REBEL FLAG HOISTED ON THE GEORGIA STATEHOUSE.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 8.—The Legislature was adjourned to-day and an old rebel flag was run up on the Statehouse amid the greatest excitement on one side and glee on the other.

THE DUARTE.

EIGHTEEN MILES NORTHEAST OF LOS Angeles, ten miles east of Pasadena, One of the most beautiful and healthy settlements in Southern California. It certainly has many advantages, especially as regards its location and water supply. Being on the foot of the Sierra Madre range, overlooking the valley for miles in extent. The climate cannot be excelled anywhere in the State. The Duarte is the home of the orange, lemon and lime. The fruits show for themselves as regards the above statement. As irrigation is generally necessary in Southern California, water is a very essential consideration. Duarte boasts of one of the best water rights in Los Angeles county, having been on record for over twelve years. There are now two incorporated water companies in operation. The supply of water is ample during the driest portion of the year. The Duarte foothill fruits always command the highest market price at home and abroad. A drive from Los Angeles along Foothill is one of interest. The scenery is constantly changing, making it interesting and pleasant. The Duarte is especially adapted to those suffering with lung trouble, as it is fully protected from severe frosts and bleak winds. Any one in search of a nice home should visit the Duarte and investigate the above statements before purchasing elsewhere. Duarte town site is now laid out, consisting of some seventeen acres beautifully located and dotted with live oaks. Avenues and streets are surveyed and laid out. Lots can be purchased at from $50 to $200 per lot. One block is reserved for school purposes, which will be donated if some one with enterprise will agree to build a suitable hotel on said block. nol w im

Special Notice to the Afflicted.

M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M. D., M. C. P. S. O.,

Formerly of Detroit, Michigan, and for 14 years proprietor of the Detroit Throat and Lung Institute, continues to treat all the various diseases of the Throat and Chest, 275 North Main street, Los Angeles, California, by the Aerean or Inhalation system of practice.

All diseases of the respiratory organs treated by the most improved medicated inhalations, thus bringing the remedies into direct contact with the diseased parts. These are in all cases combined with proper constitutional remedies for the liver, stomach, nervous system and blood, etc.

CONSUMPTION.

The early symptoms of this disease are a sense of weariness upon little exertion, and difficulty of breathing, pass ive and like, a peculiar sensitiveness of the effects of cold and a shortness of breath upon moving (as by ordinary walking a hill or stair), a slight hacking cough, with or without expectoration, flying pains, sometimes in the chest back, or under the shoulder blades. The symptoms are worse by acts or during the night; slight fever in the afternoon, cold feet and hands, and in many cases a bone lividity of the lips and roots of the finger nails.

The more advanced symptoms are wasting of flesh, diarrhœa, chills and fever, night sweats, expectoration of yellow pus from the mucous cells in the lungs, which, when it works out a depression of the chest, increasing weakness, and at last a clearing up of the diseased cells of the lungs, causing strangulation or suffocation of the patient for want of power to eject the mucous from the lungs.

Heretofore the treatment of consumption has been unsatisfactory, both to physicians and their patients; but, lately, since the discovery of the Aerean system of Price, a few years ago, thousands of cases have been completely cured there, and it not been for the system of practice, utter failure to combat the evil is of the disease would have continued up to the pre ent time. The system of Medicated Inhalations is the only means by which these diseases can be cured. By this means we are enabled to dissolve the hardened mucous in the lungs, ease the cough, facilitate expectoration, control and limit the secretions, and relieve all hope of cure by the ordinary methods is past.

At Last!

It is all over, and Blaine, our great leader, is defeated. Now, for the first time since the great struggle began, we see full reason for conceding Cleveland's election. By a very slim plurality—less than one per cent. of the entire popular vote cast—the Democratic candidate has carried the State of New York and is elected President. In common with Republicans everywhere, we accept the result cheerfully, courageously. We bow to the will of the people. Republicans can gracefully submit to reverses, if need be; they are capable of taking their medicine, bitter though it is. They will not imitate the wicked example of the disloyal Democracy in 1860, when, with arms in their hands, they resisted the legally-expressed will of the people and made war on the Government rather than submit to the benign rule of the great-hearted and good Lincoln.

We submit to the inevitable, not acknowledging, however, that our cause or our candidate have been overthrown by legitimate methods. The Republican party and its grand chieftain have sustained an undeserved defeat, the causes for which are plain to all men. We do not here and now go into the enumeration or the discussion thereof. It is enough to say now that treachery in our own camp and wicked and lawless methods in the camp of the common enemy and his perfidious allies are the causes of our defeat.

The cause is not lost; the Republican party is defeated but not conquered; it lives, and lives to fight another day; it will win in the end, because its principles are undying.

RUN UP THE OLD FLAG!

WHO is the coming Postmaster of Los Angeles?

Is Dukw Gwin to sw ing the patronage of the Pacific Coast? Hardly!

THE Chicago Inter-Ocean expresses to a dot our sentiments touching the result.

IN the First District the contest between Carothers (R.) and Henley (D.) is still not certainly decided.

THE party of "purity," the Prohibitionists, are gloating over their great victory with Grover Cleveland.

HORIZONTAL BILL MORRISON was elected two years ago by 2800 majority. He is re-elected by a majority of less than 800.

WHEN they consider how disastrously they have been driven from power at home, the Democrats of Los Angeles county should go slow in the yelling business.

IT was a cheerful sight to see the Prohibitionists, the bravest Democrats, stand around the streets and hug themselves with delight over the supposed election of such a man as Cleveland over the brilliant statesman, Blaine. Curious cattle, these Prohibitionists.

"WATER and Whiskey don't Mix" was one of the transparencies carried in the Democratic procession last night. But they do mix, for the pure and saintly cold-water men have joined hands with the party whose chief inspiration, according to one of their principal speakers, is whiskey.

SEVERAL of our contemporaries, particularly those of the Democratic breed, are industriously publishing the statement that Mr. Blaine is seriously ill. It is possibly true, but we have as yet seen no confirmation of the statement. Blaine still lives, and may the Plumed Knight live long years yet!

CONKLING thinks that Arthur will be a Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1888. Of course, if he is, he will be nominated and elected. Oh, yes! the friends of the betrayed and sacrificed Blaine will rush to his support with tremendous energy and overmastering enthusiasm.

BLAINE'S majority in Illinois falls behind that of Garfield's just about to the extent of the Prohibition vote that was fooled into supporting the hypocritical Judas, St. John, who was working for Cleveland, and it is reported has received $30,000 of rum-raised funds for his treacherous services.

CONGRESSMAN SUMNER, who was in the city yesterday en route to Washington, to be present at the meeting of Congress in December, received a dispatch while here informing him of his election over Louttit, his Republican opponent. The news, however, is not confirmed by the Associated Press dispatches, and may not be true, though Mr. S. M. White received a similar dispatch yesterday.

LET the narrow-minded partisan bigots and implacable haters in the Cleveland and St. John party of Los Angeles, and the renegade Republicans as well, who have been exhibiting their insane fury at the TIMES for not hauling down its flag before the defeat of its great leader was certainly known, note the attitude of leading Republican papers of the country on this same point, and then see what sublime and irreclamable idiots they have been making of themselves. We make a rule never to acknowledge ourselves beaten before we are beaten. The Los Angeles Herald will take notice. Put this in your meer-sham and apply the match to the kinnikinick therein.

Fire this Morning.

Shortly after 2 o'clock this morning a fire was discovered in a pile of rubbish under the steps in the rear of the Grand Central Hotel. An alarm was sounded, and an engine was quickly on the ground, but the flames were extinguished before the engine got into service. Without the disparagany of the members of the department in the least, the attention of Council is called to the fact, there is lack of system in the present fire department that needs to be remedied. The department needs a practical man at its head, one who understands his business, and who will attend to it.

MR. BLAINE YIELDS.

He Considers the Question Settled and Cleveland Elected.

Associated Press Dispatches to The Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 15.—A special to the Herald from Augusta says Blaine regards the official count of New York as practically settling the Presidential question, and Blaine, it is stated on authority, received this afternoon a telegram from New York announcing the completion of the official canvass in that city and informing him that the plurality for Cleveland in that State would be 1137. The same authority states that Blaine accepts the result very cheerfully, and has no regrets growing out of his connection with the campaign. He feels that he made a good fight, and gracefully bows to the verdict of the American people. He believes the Republican party will prove true to its grand past, and will increase in strength with coming years. He expects that in 1888 it will again be called back into power. Blaine leaves for Washington the middle of next week, where he and his family will spend the winter. He has leased the Sargent house in Farragut square, and will shortly resume his work on the second volume of "Twenty Years in Congress." The volume will be ready in June next for publication.

THE AGONY OVER.

The Republican Committee Acknowledge Defeat.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The National and State headquarters of the Republican and Democratic Committees closed to-night. Chairman Jones of the Republican National Committee left his rooms early. Secretary Fessenden and Committeeman Elkins remained during the early evening and were in conversation with Walker Blaine. All conceded Cleveland's election. Assistant Secretary Loomis says it is all over. "We only await the action of the State Board of Canvassers on Wednesday next, but we have made a good fight, considering that we did not have one-third of the amount of funds controlled by the National Committee in the Garfield campaign."

The Democratic National Committee headquarters were deserted. Senators Gorman, Jonas and Barnum had left the city, feeling that their work was ended. Chairman Smith, of the State Committee, has gone home to Plattsburg, and Secretary Bunn left this evening. There was little talk about the hotels and public resorts about the election, those who knew that Cleveland's official plurality in this city is 43,064 alone speaking on that particular. Professional betting men have not settled their wagers, but await the decision of Kelly & Bliss, bookmakers, which will be given after the action of the State Board of Canvassers.

NEW YORK CITY RETURNS.

The Vote All Counted, but No Announcement Made.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The Seventeenth Assembly District was completed at 11:15 a. m. The count of the first district of the Eighteenth Assembly District was objected to on the grounds that the total number of votes as read was shown to be 198, whereas it was claimed that 226 votes were really cast in the District, and that the Republican electoral ticket received 81 votes, instead of 54, as recorded. The vote of the first election district therefore was referred to the Committee on Corrected Returns. The twenty-first election district of the Eighteenth Assembly District has been reached. The canvass of the Eighteenth Assembly District was finished at noon. No other errors were found than one in the first election district. The Nineteenth Assembly District was completed without incident. It was resolved to request the Committee on Corrected Returns to give preference to the electoral ticket. The canvass of the returns for the Twentieth Assembly District was completed at 12:20 without objection being made. In the Twenty-first Assembly District no objections or changes were made. Five defective ballots and four blanks were found.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The Board of Canvassers' vote on the Presidential ticket in the First Assembly District complete gives Blaine 2775, Cleveland 4263, Butler 96, St. John 15.

Fifteenth Assembly District complete gives Blaine 4172, Cleveland 6446, Butler 215, St. John 44.

Sixteenth Assembly District complete gives Blaine 2718, Cleveland 5319, Butler 167, St. John 17.

Seventeenth Assembly District complete gives Blaine 5265, Cleveland 6395, Butler 214, St. John 57.

Eighteenth Assembly District complete gives Blaine 2785, Cleveland 6253, Butler 209, St. John 25.

Nineteenth Assembly District complete gives Blaine 4580, Cleveland 6580, Butler 163, St. John 56.

Twentieth Assembly District complete—Blaine 3436, Cleveland 6016, Butler 135, St. John 8.

Twenty-first Assembly District complete—Blaine 4080, Cleveland 4640, Butler 59, St. John 59.

Twenty-second Assembly District complete—Blaine 5341, Cleveland 9104, Butler 284, St. John 64.

Twenty-third Assembly District complete—Blaine 1231, Cleveland 8842, Butler 393, St. John 132.

Twenty-fourth Assembly District complete—Blaine 3615, Cleveland 5369, Butler 142, St. John 36.

The Seventh, Ninth and Eleventh Assembly Districts are yet incomplete.

THE CANVASS COMPLETED.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The Board of Canvassers completed the canvass of the 712 election districts in this city this evening.

The first election district of the Eighteenth Assembly District, by an error, returned 54 votes for Blaine instead of 81, when the number should have been 81. The Committee on Corrections will rectify the error and report in favor of 81 votes Monday morning. With that return the official vote of the lowest Democratic elector in this city is 133,157, and for the highest Republican elector 90,093, giving the lowest Cleveland elector a plurality of 43,064. The following are the official and complete figures in the Assembly Districts named:

Seventh—Blaine 4882, Cleveland 4620, Butler 106, St. John 78.

Ninth—Blaine 4581, Cleveland 5273, Butler 125, St. John 124.

Thirteenth — Blaine 4876, Cleveland 4455, Butler 131, St. John 100.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1884.

A Journalistic Street-Walker.

The Alta California is a paper of whose editors it can be said, in the language of the poet, "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." It is a journal whose record and career are such that it can't afford to expose itself to the fire of loaded cotemporaries, nor get too near the buzz-saw of hostile criticism. The Alta felt itself moved, a few days since, to crawl out of the dust and dirt where it has been wallowing, and to hurl the following censorious paragraph at the Los ANGELES TIMES:

Out of all the Republican papers in the State, the Los Angeles Times is the only one that fails to show a gleam of good sense in its comments on the election of Cleveland. The Times prints a column of twaddle, in which it says: "The pirate ship Democracy appears to be riding the national seas triumphant." It is full time for a change of administration when partisans grow so blind as to think that the people have no right to take the Government out of the hands of their particular party.

So, frail Madam?

It has been but a few days since the Alta was beautifully and deservedly polished off by the Sacramento Record-Union for its numerous base and venal political sins. Our capital contemporary's description of this prostrate old journalistic harlot is so accurate and graphic that we are constrained to make use of portions of it, in the interest of historic truth, "which is no less sacred than religion," as Napoleon the Third remarked in the outset of his "Ideas." The Record-Union points out that the Alta California newspaper had the opportunity before it, in the late campaign, of winning a splendid success for itself, and of making itself the great, powerful, dominant journal of its party on this coast. It failed because it lacked the courage, manhood and breadth of brain to meet the emergency and grasp the opportunity. The Record-Union remarks that "Mistakes in journalism, of the character of that to which we refer, invariably result from lack of backbone. A devotion to principle will anchor the courageous in safe harbors, but a barter of conviction for partisan policy is the invariable indication of moral cowardice. That such an opportunity should have been allowed to escape it awakened stupendous amazement. It did let it slip. It made a mistake, and it had the cowardice to adhere to it. It knew its ground, and all the pitfalls dug for it, and yet it stumbled. "Any man may make a mistake," said Cicero; "none but a fool will stick to it." The Alta stuck to it. When the Stockton Convention snubbed it, defied its warnings and scoffed at its advice, it came down from its pedestal and took its "greal" from the hands of Buckley and Greathouse with a humiliating obeisance that was disgusting, and when the time came for the nomination of local and legislative officers in San Francisco, it "stumbled against the same stone again," to do which is "a proverbial disgrace." Read out of the party its chief [Ex-Lieut. Gov. James A. Johnson], decapitated by a servile Governor, its counsels laughed to scorn, it still cringed at the feet of the party bosses, and kissed the robes of the very men who had been bought and sold to work its ruin. It confessed its shame in these remarkable lines:

There must be a reason why a State which only two years back, at the last election held, gave a Democratic majority of over 23,000, and wheeled so many Republican counties into the Democratic line, a State which elected a solid Democratic delegation to Congress, should now give the Republicans a large majority, elect four or five Republican Congressmen and a Republican Legislature, and surrender not only counties which had before gone Republican, but also counties hitherto Democratic into the hands of the Republicans. The single instance of "Old Sonoma," never before lost to the Democracy in its representation, is significant and humiliating. It is in every sense a mortifying State defeat, and the responsibility rests upon those in charge of the Democratic party, its managers and leaders, upon those in high offices and commanding positions, and the Democracy of the State will hold these men, these officials to this responsibility. But the subject is not one of pleasure; still it is a duty to note it. And the Alta will perform that duty without fear and with due consideration for all involved.

"Too late! The opportunity let slip from between its trembling fingers, is gone forever. Its days of usefulness and influence have departed from it. It may be swift to atone for error, as it suggests, but it can not retrieve its lost opportunity. "Error is worse than ignorance," and here is an instance where knowledge cut short the excuse of ignorance, and "omission to do what was necessary sealed a commission to a blank of danger."

In short, the Alta California "fell down;" it licked the dust, and with horrible facial contortions ate the crow set before it by the Examiner-Hearst crowd. It debased itself for the sake of a few crumbs of patronage hoped for but not realized, and when its cause and its hopes of success in California were blasted by the immeasurable folly, the immaculate stupidity and the matchless demagogueery of the party and its leaders (of which it considers itself one), it whines in the above unmanly way, makes faces at its companions in disaster, and proves itself the opposite of a thoroughbred, who never throws off on his companions in arms, whether in victory or defeat.

The Alta California is not a qualified censor to reproach the Los ANGELES TIMES for its political course.

Alameda to Los Angeles.

Under the heading, "A Growing Section," our bright, able and generous cotemporary, the Oakland Tribune, has the following to say about California del Sur:

The southern part of this State is growing more rapidly in population than any other portion of the Pacific Coast. Los Angeles county is fast approaching Alameda county in population, and has taken her place as third in the list of counties in the State—San Francisco being first, Alameda second, and now Los Angeles stands third. The county polled nearly 11,000 votes at the late election, being a gain of 4,000 over the vote of two years ago. Alameda county polled less than 13,000 votes—not 2,000 more votes than Los Angeles gave. There is another encouraging feature in the vote of the semi-tropical county, which will serve to attract population—it gave a good Republican majority, and stands redeemed from the shackles of unprogressive Bourbon Democracy. We bid our southern sister god-speed in her career of prosperity, and will assure her that Alameda county don't feel jealous a bit.

We believe you, man and brother! And we assure you that the people of Los Angeles county appreciate the generous spirit and friendly feeling which is manifested in the above extract. Los Angeles is proud to move abreast with fair Alameda in the grand march of progress. We believe that the claim that the noble Republican victory which we have won in Los Angeles county and Southern California will work directly for the material prosperity of this section, is a well-founded claim, and in that belief we rejoice, for the advancement of the region of our choice is a consideration only secondary with us to the welfare of the whole Republic.

Los Angeles, Adelante!

There seems to be no let up in the business activity of Los Angeles. There is such a constant influx of people and capital into the city and country that the avenues of barter and trade are kept full and stirring. Just now money is a little tight, but there is, nevertheless, a steady, healthful growth, that is promising for the future of this section. Strangers who have recently arrived from across the continent report that large numbers of people from different parts of the country are making preparations to come here during the winter with a view of remaining permanently.

As the resources, productiveness and climate of this section of the State become better known the desire to find homes here is largely on the increase among well-to-do people, as well as those of large capital. The majority of those coming to us now are people who will become property owners. Thus they identify themselves at once with our interests and growth, and do their share towards securing it. Small ranches are becoming numerous and home-centers are multiplying. Thrift and industry are a marked feature of these homes. The old days of vast ranches, of uncultivated acres and solitary ranch-houses have passed forever from this section of Southern California. Schoolhouses, and churches, and villages are springing up on every side, and signs of prosperity are everywhere visible. The growth of Los Angeles has been almost unexampled within the past five years, but it may be safely predicted that it has not equaled what it will be in the future.

The Clergy.

One marked feature of the presidential campaign just closed was the deep and engrossing interest manifested in it by all classes in community. Never before in the history of the country have the clergy, as a class, been so thoroughly infected with the struggles of the political world as during the contest which has just ended. At the opening of the rebellion, when the life of the nation was in peril, the clergy of the North stood up boldly in their pulpits cheering the soldier and the citizen alike on to patriotic devotion. Equally earnest have they shown themselves now, and not less awake to the vital issues of the hour. Words of judicious counsel they have given, and predominantly has their influence been on the side of the party whose chosen leader is the representative of moral ideas, and a respecter of the sacredness of the home and family relations. Such effort was not unworthy of their high office, and it is to their honor that they did not stand aloof from the contest or view the struggle with indifference.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Mormonism is like a thistle; when one is planted what a harvest will spring from the seed! The effort to curb the power of the Mormon church in Utah has had the tendency to scatter its members abroad into the surrounding Territories, where they are already struggling hard to obtain a secure foothold. They are striving in these sparsely populated territories, at a distance from the civilizing reach of the railroads, to grasp the balance of political power, and thus to elect men who shall be friendly to the interests and teachings of the Mormon church. The young territories of Montana, Idaho, and Arizona already feel the throttling hand of Mormonism upon the throat of their growing prosperity and civilization, and they have uttered their strong protest against the evil. The action of Governor Tritle, of Arizona, calling the attention of the National Government to the spread of Mormonism in that Territory and recommending that it take measures to check its spread, should receive the prompt attention that it deserves. Decisive measures are demanded, and the sooner they are exercised the better it will be for the moral health of the nation.

The old Romans had grand methods for the ornamentation of their imperial city. Their achievements were expressed in triumphal arches which added beauty to their streets and glory to their history. They were monuments of art and of architectural design. Why would not the old Roman idea be a good one for us to follow? The victories of peace, and the achievements of progress might be embodied in them. A Yankee, Hon. Charles E. Tilton, of Tilton, N. H., seized upon the idea on a late visit to Rome, and since his return, he has reared a granite arch in the town bearing his name, which is a duplicate of the noble arch of Titus. The old Yankee town is proud of its memorial arch—and it's a beauty.

A Capital Scheme.

New York Sun.]

"What do you do when people come and bore you?" a warm personal friend asked of a merchant.

"When they stay too long the office boy, who is very bright and knows just when to interfere, tells me that a gentleman is in the counting-room, waiting to see me on important business."

"Ha! ha! That's a capital way to get rid of bores who don't know——"

Just then the boy opened the door and sang out:

"Gent in the countin'-room, waitin' to see you on important business."

Jefferson Davis' Military Policy.

Gen. Beauregard, in The Century.]

No people ever warred for independence with more relative advantages than the Confederates, and if, as a military question, they must have failed, then no country must aim at freedom by means of war. We were one in sentiment as in territory, starting out not with a struggling administration of doubtful authority, but with our ancient State Governments and a fully organized central Government. As a military question, it was in no sense a civil war, but a war between two countries—for conquest on one side, for self-preservation on the other. The South, with its great material resources, its defensive means of mountains, waterways, railroads, and telegraph, with the immense advantage of the interior lines of war, would be open to discredit as a people if its failure could not be explained otherwise than by mere material contrast. The Great Frederick, at the head of a little people, not only beat back a combination of several great military powers, but conquered and kept territory, and Napoleon held combined Europe at the feet of France till his blind ambition overleaped itself. It may be said that the South had no Fredericks or Napoleons, but it had at least as good commanders as its adversary. Nor was it the fault of our soldiers or people. Our soldiers were as brave and intelligent as ever bore arms, and if only for reasons already mentioned they had a determination superior to the enemy's. Our people bore a devotion to the cause never surpassed, and which no war-making monarch ever had for his support; they gave their all, even the last striplings under the family roofs filling the ranks voided by the fall of their fathers and brothers. But the narrow military view of the head of the government, which illustrated itself in the outset by ordering from Europe, not 100,000 or 1,000,000, but 10,000 stands of arms, as an increase upon 8,000, its first estimate was equally narrow and consequently timid in its employment of our armies. The moral and material forces actually engaged in the war made our success a moral certainty, but for the timid policy which—ignoring strategy as a science and boldness of enterprise as its ally—could never be brought to view the whole theater of war as one subject, of which all points were but integral parts, or to hazard for the time points relatively unimportant for the purpose of gathering for an overwhelming and rapid stroke at some decisive point; and which, again, with characteristic miscalculation, would push a victorious force directly forward into unsupported and disastrous operations, instead of using its victory to spare from its strength sufficient to secure an equally important success in another quarter.

A Mustached Hypocrite.

Kansas City Journal.]

St. John, the mustached hypocrite whom the temperance men of Kansas are hanging in effigy all over the State, went up and down among the church people of New York, appealing to them "to stand up and be counted for God and home." What he meant in his malicious, revengeful heart was to vote in the interest of rum and rebellion and help elect their candidates, and the poor deluded fools did, and the saint now laughs and jingles his pieces of money in his pocket, the reward paid him for betraying the party of sobriety and patriotism.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

[This is the TIMES-MIRROR'S Public Forum. Those who would stand thereon must first give the editor their real names and be responsible for their opinions and statements.]

Some Advice From Miss Grundy.

To the Editor of the Times—SIR: Is there any law to prevent a woman's speaking in meeting provided no one else is talking? I shall act upon the supposition that there is not, and have my little say, with your permission, about a matter that I deem of vital importance. I think I have learned a lesson from the late political campaign, and one which should be generally understood by women. Of course the women are curious to know what the lesson is. It is a painful one, but it should be carefully heeded and not forgotten. It is this: The impulsive, enthusiastic and illogical reformer, led on by one single idea and blinded by that to all other issues, may find that "by treading where she does not comprehend she will make her own ruin." The women of the prohibition ranks espoused the cause of St. John, as if by following in his lead a universal abolishment of whiskey and the saloon would be the result. The party that has always been the party of law and order—the grand old party to which we owe to-day our existence as a nation, was antagonized by the extremists, not only in the male but in the female ranks of the Prohibitionists,—the unreasoning ones who vainly hope to precipitate a reform before they have even prepared the way for it. Although a woman, I ask, when will women learn to reason? When will they come to understand that the establishment of a national temperance law will be the result of patient, steady endeavor—that it can be secured only by the education of the nation up to a full understanding of its moral needs and necessities? I am sure that it was not the wives and the mothers of the land who aimed through their blow at the Republican party a deadly thrust at temperance and morality. It was the radical and unreasoning ones, who, fastening their political faith to the skirts of a demagogue, and blind to results, used themselves and those whom they could influence, as heavy clogs to the wheels of reform, and through the advocacy of abrupt measures have hindered, by many years, the attainment of the end for which they labored. Only one word more, my sisters: If you are not able to trace out logical sequences don't attempt the role of reformers.

MISS GRUNDY.

The Court House Bonds—The U. S. Senator—The Banks.

To the Editor of the Times—SIR: There were other causes than those I have seen enumerated that led to the defeat of the Court House bonds. The fact that the bar had condemned the plan had its effects, for it was supposed that lawyers ought to know a thing or two about Court Houses. But the voters with whom I mingled, (and I took occasion to mingle a good deal,) felt that the public roads in their shameful condition demanded attention before some other things. That although a new Court House was wanted, yet better roads was a longer felt and a stronger felt want. They, therefore, proposed to emphasize their demand by postponing the lesser event.

Then again, Republicans did not know into whose hands this "puppet issue" of $300,000 might fall. Had they known that Messrs. Foord, Lindley and Macy would sit in control, they would have felt more confidence in the scheme.

The Republicans hereabout favor the Hon. M. M. Estee for U. S. Senator. They have not forgotten his noble services to the party, and his splendid record as an anti-monopolist. And then they have the old-fashioned notion that men of ability should be preferable to the third-rate fellows.

OBSERVER.

SOUTH PASADENA, Nov. 14.

A Straightforward Letter.

To the Editor of the Times—SIR: As an impression seems to prevail among my friends that I am a Prohibitionist, I wish to state that I am a Republican. About two years ago, and shortly after my arrival here, I was asked to sign a Prohibition roll, and coming from Kansas, where prohibition is a strong element of the Republican party, I signed as a temperance Republican, but with no intention of antagonizing myself to the party, nor do I propose to be crowded or bulldozed into a false position now. My nomination by the Prohibitionists for District Attorney was contrary to my wishes. I went to the committee and told them as much, and requested that my name be withdrawn. It wasn't done at the time; but later I took the matter into my own hands, and withdrew my name from the canvass. Were there a prohibition wing to the Republican party in this State, my inclinations would lead me to it; but neither solitary prohibition nor any other lone issue can estrange me from the political principles to which I have always adhered.

F. X. PALMER.

Is This a True Charge?

To the Editor of the Times—SIR: There seems to be considerable dissatisfaction among Republican voters of Los Angeles county on account of some of the newly-elected county officers employing Democrats as their deputies. If these gentlemen insist on employing Democrats as their deputies, instead of good Republicans, Los Angeles will have enough disaffected Republicans to defeat the Republican ticket at the coming city election, which takes place on the first of next month. I think it would be a good thing to notify all the successful county officers as soon as possible on account of the near approach of the city election that they must under no consideration employ a Democrat as deputy, as they are forfeiting their trust when they do so.

Comments on the Result.

No such insult to intelligence has ever before been perpetrated by the American people. Embodying in a remarkable degree all that culture, education and genius are thought to represent, Mr. Blaine is pushed aside for a man in whom the lower faculties predominate.—[Ohio State Journal.

Susan B. Anthony has good, sound sense, which cannot be said of St. John or any of his followers: "I am a prohibitionist, but was opposed to making the issue a national one. The Democratic success sets back prohibition and woman suffrage many years." Yes, and now the idiots are mourning over their folly.—[Oakland Tribune.

The conceited chuckling of George William Curtis over the close result in New York is fitly typified in the fall of Lucifer. Curtis allied with John Kelly and Mule Barnum, is a spectacle for gods and men!—[Ohio State Journal.

The protracted uncertainty of the election has been a terrible strain on those patriots who feel it incumbent on them to get drunk at every election and keep drunk till everything quiets down again.—[Washington Star.

Belva Lockwood concedes her defeat, and bears it with an appearance of cheerful resignation, but it is suspected that she is chagrined in no small degree at the fact that her vote is not large enough to keep her in curl papers for a week.—[Chicago Times.

If it should turn out that Grover Cleveland is actually elected President, every ex-Confederate that can pay his way to Washington will be there on the 4th of March to apply for an office.—[Kansas City Journal.

Let Her Swing.

If Cleveland gets into the White House, Maria Halpin ought to insist upon the privilege, at least, of swinging a hammock under the shade trees at the Soldiers' Home, the usual summer residence of the President.

NEW BOOKS.

HISTORY OF THE NORTHWEST COAST. Vol. I. San Francisco: A. L. Bancroft & Co.

The history of our coast is being nobly written by Hubert Howe Bancroft. The wonderful story of discovery is spread before us upon its pages like a vivid panorama. In his "History of the Pacific States," this present volume covers the eventful period from 1800 to 1846—the stirring epoch of Lewis and Clarke's expedition, the founding of Astoria and the ascendency of that monster monopoly the Hudson Bay Company, the settlement of the Oregon question, and the work of exploration by American trappers and pioneers. Familiar with the scenes of this region, personally acquainted with many of the actors in this wild drama of adventure, following step by step the advance of civilization, he has drawn upon resources that have not been at the command of other historians, who, unlike him, have never traversed this wild region, and familiarized themselves with the life of the officers of the Hudson Bay Company, that gigantic monopoly which at one time was the controlling power of the territory, and which, at an early period, stretched from the month of the St. Lawrence to the bay of San Francisco. Of this wide territory the historian gives the following picture:

When Lewis and Clarke set out on their expedition, the great Unknown Region, as it was called, equivalent to 1,000 miles square and more, between the head waters of the Missouri and the Pacific ocean, was, if we except the exterior of Alaska and the Silken country, further removed from civilization than any other part of North America. The Hudson Bay Company had explored its borders north. English ships had sailed through many channels in search of Anian strait and a northern passage, and Hearne had pursued his grumbling way from Fort Churchill to the mouth of the Coppermine. The Canadian merchants had taken possession of the Canadian northwest, and had planted their forts from Lake Superior to Athabasca, while the determined Mackenzie had followed the river which bears his name to the Arctic ocean, and had crossed from Fesce river to the Pacific. New Mexico was known; California was known, and so were portions of Alaska. Only this central temperate tract remained yet hidden in shadows primeval.

Of this expedition Mr. Bancroft furthermore says:

The expedition carried out under the command of Captains Lewis and Clarke was characterized by a degree of humanity, courage, perseverance and justice honorable alike to officer and soldier. The prudence and wisdom manifested in all their intercourse with the natives have never been excelled, even by the most experienced of the British fur companies. No dastardly act blots their record. Without achieving anything very admirable, without enduring sacrifices as great as those of many emigrants, without enlisting the sympathy or admiration drawn from us by many of the women of 1842 and subsequent emigrations, they yet accomplished an important and difficult task. In reading their narrative we can but feel them to be men above small things. But for thrilling experiences, for deeds of great daring, for heart-rending suffering, for romantic adventure we must look elsewhere.

In relation to the jealousy exercised towards the adventurous settlers by the Hudson Bay Company, and of the injustice of the company's directors in London, who blamed McLaughlin, one of the ablest and most humane directors of the company, for his charity exercised towards them in their need in this great wilderness, the historian says:

As a corporation, I say, they would have assuredly left them to die; but as men and eye-witnesses of those sufferings they never was a Scotchman or an Englishman that traded in furs in America, or held stock in any British fur company, who would have turned his back upon them. McLaughlin could not do it; not for all England could he, and yet his company theoretically blamed him for not doing what not one of them individually could have been brought to do under any circumstances. How sharp-edged is corporation intellect on the side of interest; how slow of wit and illogical, not to say stolidly brutish and mercilessly cruel when God or humanity calls for sacrifice. Happy money-makers who can thus sink the moral responsibility of the individual in the blood-less body of a corporation! But what shall I say of the poor wretches McLaughlin saved from death? Better have let them die, some of them. Some of them were good and true, working with a will, they and their wives and their children, until their benefactor was every dollar paid, and ever after holding his name in grateful remembrance. Those were the salt of Oregon, and let their posterity ever call them blessed. But of those who in their dire distress received the old man's kindness and never repaid it, never tried to repay it, never acknowledged it; of those who received kindness and repaid it only in vilifying their benefactor, I say, better tenfold those men had been left to die, and that no offspring upon whom the disgrace of such parentage had fallen should ever have encumbered the earth.

A valuable feature of this volume is a complete index, which covers both volumes of the Northwest Coast.

A Cabinet for Cleveland.

Kansas City Journal.]

As the Democrats are casting around for a cabinet for Cleveland, we would suggest that if he be elected it will be mostly due to the 153 votes of the solid South, and very much due to St. John, and in deference to them the following cabinet would be just the thing:

Secretary of State—Jeff Davis.

Secretary of War—Gen. Beauregard.

Secretary of the Navy—Senator Vest, as he never was at sea, and never saw it before he was sent to the Senate, since when he has talked more navy and knows more of it than any sea-dog in America.

Secretary of the Treasury—John Peter St. John, as he has had great experience in lending money at usurious rates, especially to farmers, about whom the Democracy affect to be much concerned.

Secretary of the Interior — Jacob Thompson, surviving member of and Secretary of the Interior in Buchanan's Cabinet.

Postmaster General — Reagan, of Texas, Jef Davis's Postmaster General.

Attorney General—Bob Toombs, of Georgia, sah.

A Pledge Redeemed.

The delegates to the Chicago Convention from the Pacific Coast declared that if Blaine were nominated he would sweep California, Oregon and Nevada—two of which were carried by Hancock in 1880. And they have completely redeemed their pledge, as the returns prove.

His Go-as-You-Please Walk Over the Continent.

AN INTERVIEW WITH FRANK JAMES.

How Traveling Through Kansas He Comes to the Conclusion that Prohibition Doesn't Prohibit.

Missouri makes me think of Ceylon's isle,

"Where every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile."

Nature was in a remarkably generous mood when she planned and laid out this rich garden State. After all the growth of the East, it was a grateful relief to the tramp's eyes to see the green richness of Missouri. The fields were high with strong young wheat, the rivers and creeks were full of water, and a wonderful crop of fruit added a finishing touch to the picture of prosperity. But oh, the people! Such ignorant, shiftless folks I never saw outside the South. Their status is not surprising, however—the almost universal politics of the State would lead you to expect that.

Leaving St. Louis Sept. 28th, I traveled out on a fine pike through the county of the same name. It is one of the richest sections of Missouri, and, though a hard and persistent rain rather dampened my appreciation. Thirty-seven miles out from St. Louis a change to the track of the Missouri Pacific R. R. took me into poorer country, but along a much more direct route. The fifty miles through which this road winds in and out with the broad tide of the Missouri, makes an interesting walking as one may easily find. The track crawls along under overhanging limestone cliffs from 50 to 150 feet in height. Some of these rocky headlands are nearly as fine as those which have made the Hudson world-famous.

At noon, the last day of September, I was climbing the hilly streets of Jefferson City, that measly little capital of a measly State. Built on a commanding eminence, whose base is washed by the placid Missouri, the city has an outlook of rare loveliness. For itself, however, it is far from a thing of beauty—a straggling, gingerbready town of about 5,000 people. The Capitol building has a hill to itself, and suggests a big "yaller dog" in color and clumsiness. Letters received here called for more steam under my boiler, requiring me to meet my family in Denver ten days earlier than I had anticipated. So I pushed on 15 miles further in a drenching rain, making a day's total trip of 41 miles. Got to Sedalia the next night, after a long, hot tramp of 49 miles. Planned to stop here over night, but reckoned without my host. The tramp's natural first hotel whose sign met my eye, got supper, wrote a little, and called for a room. The heat of the day had given me an insufferable headache, and a peaceful snooze was greatly to be desired. But the clerk showed me into a room beside which a menagerie would have been paradise. It was on the ground floor, evidently unused for months, and damp and mephitic as a tomb. Great patches of mould frescoed the plastering, and through the broken walls hungry-looking rats played hide-and-seek. The mosquitoes sang arias from Wagner over the bed, and altogether things did not look inviting. Still I tumbled into bed, cut a hole through the sheet, and pulled it up over my head. That froze out the mosquitoes, but my ingenuity could not circumvent their yet more devilish and unmentionable-to-ears-polite allies, the bugs. For two hours I tossed and kicked and—well, call it prayed; that sounds proper—my head splitting and my temper growing cyclonic, as I arose in the wrath, dressed, threw the haunted bedding over into the next lot, and sallied forth into the quiet, moonlight night, tramped away till the setting of the moon, when a well-earned nap bridged me over the hours till day-break.

Just west of Warrensburg, that morning, I had my first all-wool adventure. From over the high hedge of a neat-looking farm house a big, short-haired black dog, half hound and half mastiff, leaped menacingly after me, without a bark, but his big, red mouth open and a savage growl issuing therefrom. He was not monkeying for fun, but bent on business—after gore with a ten-line G. I heaved a couple of rocks at him, but he cared about as much for them as for the 14th amendment. I threw it in his diaphragm, and admit that my heart turned three or four back somersaults as he drew near. I have seen two cases of hydrophobia, and the bite of a savage dog has no charms for me. But there was no escape—the music had to be faced. As he made a spring right at my throat my big hunting knife flashed up through his neck and brain, and he fell at my feet. Not knowing how many buckshot his owner might have in a handy double-barrel, I eloped from the spot in short order. Folks hate to lose a dog—but that, and they never stop to reflect that he may have been the aggressor.

Near Kingsville, next day, two two-footed dogs tried a similar game. They were tall, fat, greasy tramps, and evidently coveted the handsome meerschaum in the corner of my mouth. So they at once proceeded to "hold me up." The biggest and greasiest stepped up within two feet of me, with the remark: "Say, young feller, yer can't kerry all dat plunder. Lemme tote it fur ye"—at the same time making a grab at the coat on my arm. "Well, I haven't much," said I, "but what I have you're mighty welcome to," and I gave it to him. Knife and revolver were handy in my belt, but he was standing so impudently near his goose on his pigeon, that flesh and blood would not allow the temptation to give him a "bluff," just for luck. What he got was a stiff right hand round shot on his under jaw; his heels caught on the rail, and down he went like beans in Boston. Then I started for the other fellow with my long knife, but he suddenly recollected an engagement and didn't wait. Both flew down the track as if they couldn't go fast enough, their rags fluttering behind in a hundred absurd streamers. It was as ridiculous a sight as ever made my ache. There was not a spice of danger in the encounter, for I was well armed and they were not; but the episode was "mighty amoosin," and may be mentioned as my first experience, on this trip, with tough cases.

This is the thinnest State for good water east of Colorado. All through Missouri I ran across but one spring and five wells. Everyone depends on rainwater caught in big cisterns. It is poor drinking, but maybe these people do not want it any better fashion.

At Independence, Mo., I had the pleasure of an interview with Frank James, the nervy and atrocious train robber, and the Democratic demigod of Missouri. Frank resides close to Independence, which is the county seat of Jackson county, in which Kansas City is also situated. The Fords and Youngers, with several others of the same choice set, had their homes about here too, but they are pretty well thinned out. I met Frank in the post-office, where he was reading a big bunch of correspondence, mostly from females, as the handwriting showed. Strange trait of femininity which invariably raises up for every redhanded murderer or desperado a host of gushing worshippers. Well, I introduced myself to the outlaw, shook the hand which I doubt not is stained with the blood of more than one hapless fellow, and fell into a really pleasant conversation. Personally Frank James is far from a bad looking man, and he talks in a fashion much more entertaining than the average. He is five-feet-ten in height, round shouldered, stooping and thin. Shaved. If I mistake not the reading on his face, he will die of consumption ere long. His frame is attenuated and angular, and 140 pounds would not be a bad guess for his weight. He has hair and a drooping moustache of tow-color; dull, sunken blue eyes, small and rather sunken. His nose, the most notable feature of his face, is very long, thin at the bridge, and shovel shaped at the nostrils. A straight, rather firm mouth, with thin lips and prominent large teeth; shrunken cheeks and a chin neither retreating nor strong, finish out a face which you would never select as that of the most noted criminal on the continent. His look is that of—well, not exactly an imbecile, but still not that of a strong-minded person, either. Yet it was well understood that he was the brains of the gang, as his sainted brother Jesse was its courage and strength. Frank dresses well in a suit of black diagonal, and wears a rather cowboyish buff hat. His hands are long and taper, with flexible fingers; and his feet are especially "well bred." Indeed he is of good family. He married a wealthy young lady, of the best circles of Missouri society, and she has clung to him through thick and thin with womanly devotion. His uncle is one of the richest and most respected merchants in Kansas City. Frank has no trouble about finances. He toils not, neither does he spin, but "soft snaps" befall him at every turn. He goes to nearly every fair in the two States, and never fails to come out with his pockets well lined—thanks to his being "in on the ground floor" with every horseman about. From the last Kansas City races he carried off $1700 net profits. People may disclaim it as they will, but he is one of the most influential men to-day in the whole circle of Missouri politics—a foremost leader among the Democrats of the State. He is the hero of a large element, is popular with every heeler in the State, and is feared and left unmolested by all. Any statement that he is not a lion in this semi-savage section falls decidedly flat when you remember that after all his undoubted crimes he walks the streets to-day as free as you or I. He talked very freely with me about his trials; said he felt sure "nothing would ever be done with him," and asserted with considerable energy that no end of crimes had been charged up against him of which he was not only innocent, but ignorant. After an unreserved and social chat of fifteen minutes, he wished me a safe journey, excused himself on the plea of business, and drove off with a pal.

I also had a talk with Mr. E. C. Harris, one of the forty citizens of Independence, who turned out to capture the James gang after its last exploit—the Blue Cut robbery in the spring of 1881. The anti-creanta, you will remember, stopped a Chicago and Alton express train at Blue Cut, near Independence, and went through its valuables. That was at 8 o'clock in the evening. The robbed passengers brought in the news and at 11:30 the same night forty citizens, with fifteen breeches in each division of their double-barreled guns, started out in squads to scour the surrounding country. Mr. Harris and five others rode over to the ferry on Little Blue, some five miles from town, and prepared an ambush at the water's edge. Then Harris, with two companions, started back up the cliff-girt winding road to secure the ferryman, who was suspected of "standing in" with the desperadoes. Suddenly Jesse and Frank James and Bill Younger turned a corner not twenty feet ahead, walking their horses down to the ferry, their guns over their shoulders. Three guns were up in a second, but not so quickly as the outlaws had wheeled and darted back behind the sheltering angle of the cliff. The pursuers naturally felt a little bash-ful about rushing around that corner after them, and while Harris and a companion stood guard with cocked guns at full level, their companion ran back after the rest of the party, and all five were soon in pursuit. Frank told them afterward that in the hunt they passed within ten feet of where he lay crouched with his finger on the trigger; but their search was fruitless that night. That he was finally captured, and how, is well known to you.

A few miles west of Kansas City I passed the scene of an earlier operation by the James gang. Hearing that $70,000 was to be shipped to Denver by a certain express train on the Kansas Pacific, they rode out to this lonely spot, barricaded the frightened occupants of the one little house so that they could n't get out, and forced some section men to pile a barrier upon the track. When the train stopped they pillaged it, but got only a few thousand dollars, the large sum having failed, by some lucky accident, to be ready for shipment.

Besides this cut-throat celebrity, Independence has others of different pattern. There are 400 or 500 Mormons in town—not of the polygamous stripe, however. They are earnest but ignorant and fanatical people, who believe that the Lord has given them a lien on this part of the State, and who are working persistently to get things into their own hands.

Leaving Independence for Kansas City, I went a couple of miles out of my way to see the palace which Valle, the Star-route subtractor—he is too big a man to be called a plain Anglo-Saxon t h-i-e-f—wheedled out of easy-going Uncle Sam. A mile from town this fellow has transformed 50 or 60 acres into a veritable fairy-land. Valle, back from the Nevada swell, stands like a huge mansion—half chalet and half Queen Anne—amid a labyrinth of flowers and fountains, statues and foliage plants. Around are rustic arbors and bridges, fish-ponds, boat-houses and greenhouses, and in fact everything that a spendthrift fancy could dictate and stolen money buy. The flowers in his yard are worth $5,000. Back of the mansion is a farm fitted in the same extravagant style. Well, Mr. Valle is having his soft snap now. Maybe there is counsel in the Supreme Court of his that will get onto him, even if Brewster and Bliss don't.

Kansas City interested me greatly. Full of live young blood and equally active capital, it is fast pushing to the fore. Its present population of 76,000 will be doubled, I predict, in a few years. Its buildings show up on an average far better than those of St. Louis—though the few great edifices of that place have no compeers here—and its streets are far more creditable. All are paved with round blocks of Michigan cedar, that interstices being filled with concrete. The whole makes a fine surface, though not a remarkably durable one. The city is emphatically hilly, but this feature is fast disappearing. Those landscape surgeons, the street contractors, are amputating the biggest excrescences in a manner which produces some startling results. You will see every now and then a residence—perhaps a mansion, perhaps a hovel—perched in isolate insecurity upon the top of what a Texan would call a butte, anywhere from 50 to 100 feet above the street and its neighbors. The sides of this butte are sheer as the walls of a house, and it takes a prodigious flight of steps to reach from curbstone to threshold. All these walls are fast crumbling, of course, under the erosion of frost and rain, and before long the Scriptural parable of the house that was builded upon the sand will be realized on a big scale right here in this very unscriptural place. The character of Kansas City can be described only in such vigorous Anglo Saxon as I do not care to use. I have it from one high in authority that five per cent. of the whole population are street-walkers; and the sights to be seen on all the thoroughfares make this startling assertion easily credible. Another vicious fact is that it is next to impossible to procure good tobacco or cigars in the whole place. But Kansas City is not alone in this; I have found the same state of things everywhere west of the Mississippi.

After getting out twelve miles from the city, I had to go back and attend to a carelessly forgotten errand, and thus lost a pretty fair day's walk. The loss of twenty-four miles oughtn't to ruffle one whose present occupation is nothing but tramping anyhow, but it does. I like to walk, but want the miles to count in one way or another.

At Lawrence, Kas., the new Indian school is the chief point of interest, and I was enabled to look over it. Two miles south of the little but active city, the government has just fitted a fine place of instruction for poor Lo's kids. The grounds are a mile and a quarter long by half a mile wide, mostly given over to agriculture, and admirably adapted thereto. Three generous buildings of rough stone stand on the highest point of the reservation, and afford the dusky pupils such facilities for education as not too many Caucasian children enjoy. The dormitory is 200x60 feet, four stories high, and fitted with large, well-ventilated rooms, each containing from four to ten beds. The superintendent has his office and apartments in this building; and in the basement is being prepared an industrial school, where the young bucks will learn to make shoes and bread, tin-cups and trousers, houses, furniture and other practical things. At present half the boys work on the farm while the rest go to school, the two squads changing places weekly. I visited several rooms in the handsome school building, and marveled much at the intent attention of these untutored savages. You never saw such orderly school-rooms. There was no whispering, no fidgeting, no throwing of saliva globules (as a Boston girl would say). Every eye was on the teacher, and every ear attentive. No, not all. The dullest-looking boy in the room stared at the wall a moment. A big, ugly-looking buck on the verprear seat walked noiselessly up behind the offender, seized his head with both hands, shot it around to a "front face," and walked back to his place without a word! It isn't every teacher who has so efficient allies. The instruction is now mostly of the kindergarten sort, for the pupils are from eight to twenty years. The institution is under the charge of James Marvin, LL. D., an instructor of national reputation, and the old teacher of Secretary Teller. After nine years' service as President of the Kansas State University here, he took this position to show by works his faith that here lies the true solution of the vexed and vexing "Indian problem."

They have a novel fashion of fishing out here at Lawrence. In the dashing current below the dam in the Kaw there are huge catfish weighing from 50 to 200 pounds. There are three or four old boatmen who drive up that way with a big steel hook strapped to their right arms, grope about until they find a fish, hook him, and then struggle ashore as best they may. Some time ago one of them struck game too powerful for him, and was dragged down to his death.

I have been looking up this prohibition question all through Kansas, in the interest of science, and for the sake of a lot of good friends of mine who are a little crankish in this direction. They have been in the habit of holding Kansas up by the tail before my eyes and saying: "There, look at that, now will tell us prohibition doesn't prohibit, will you? Just see how beautifully it works in Kansas"! And I never could talk back properly, for I had never seen this State of water-on-the-brain, and could pare an apology all the way from it to mankind for the "eraythar," and their general success in getting it when they wish. But now, never talk, to me of prohibition again. If a man, who has never been in Kansas, tries to tell me that prohibition prohibits there, I shall pity his gullibility; if one who has been over the State and pretends to know it, I shall set him down instanter as either a fool or a rascal. Prohibition in Kansas is the sorriest farce that ever was dragged up to the footlights of publicity. It is the laughing stock of every man whose eyes will see what is under his nose. I have not taken hearsay for this, but personal investigation. It is against my tastes as well as my principles to touch stimulants on a trip where perfect physical health is essential to thorough enjoyment; but I was bound to get at the bottom of the facts in this case anyhow. Take the eastern part of Kansas, the richest, finest, most thickly settled section—the river of the State, both in wealth and morals. Does prohibition prohibit there? Not to any appalling extent it doesn't. I found liquor procurable in every single place. In prosperous Lawrence for instance, a little city of 10,000 people, there are no less than those 19 different places wherein you can get the ardent and the frothy. You will find it in every hotel and in many a sly back door. As it is in Lawrence, so throughout the eastern part of the State. West of Junction City, however, the case is different. There are few saloons are open and defiant. I was content with a drop and the truth, but could have drunk myself blind in any place I passed. That is prohibition in Kansas. I may add that St. John is personally the most unpopular man in the State. Of the hundreds of men in all ages, parties and previous conditions with whom I talked, only two had a good word for him, and they were not enthusiastic.

At Hays City, 289 miles west of Kansas City, I picked up a traveling companion in the shape of a disreputable cowboy. He had "blowed himself in," as he said, "bucking the tiger," and left in the maw of that rapacious brute his pony, his watch, his money, and even his revolvers. He wanted to get to Wallace, where he "reckoned his brother would stake him," and after considerable hesitation decided to hoof it along with me. So he shared my bed and board for 131 miles. He was fresh from the tough surroundings of Caldwell, Kan., a pleasant little place where they had a genuine bull fight on Decoration day Sunday before—but a really warm-hearted, clever fellow and a jolly comrade. It broke him up badly to keep up with my present fast gait, for his boots were heavy and stiff, and a cowboy, though he can ride like a Centaur, is totally unfitted by lack of practice for much walking. As for these rough riders of the plains, I believe they have been done injustice. A great many excellent and anxious friends have written to me warning me to beware of the facetious cowboy, and expressing grave fears for my safety with him. But I have found no cleverer people along my march than these same alleged desperadoes. They are rough and tough, it is true, but are honest, manly fellows when one says a thing you may depend on his meaning it. Their hospitality may be a little uncouth, but it is quite as satisfactory to me as the polished hypocrisy of the society world. Indeed I never have much sympathy with people who do not get along well even in the roughest company. If a man has trouble with the cowboys, it is his own fault. They are quick to detect and resent any superciliousness of manner, and are as quick to see and ridicule any dudish effeminacy. But they are ready in appreciation of those traits of manhood now too fast becoming obsolete in "refined society," and respect muscle and "sand" and energy. They know a man when they see him, and a man with common, horse sense will find the cowboys as easy to get along with as anyone.

To gratify my own curiosity and fulfill a promise to eastern friends, I made a trial spurt from Ellsworth, Kansas, just to see how much ground I could cover in twenty-four hours. It was 10 o'clock a. m. when I left Ellsworth, and at 10 the next morning I stood in Ellis, an even 79 miles away. I had expected to go over 80, for the walking was remarkably fine; but in taking an hour's nap at midnight I overslept and lost three hours, so that my walking time was but twenty-one hours.

Had the pleasure of seeing the Monte Carneiro sheep ranch—the finest in Kansas—and came away much wiser for the visit. This ranch is owned and directed by Mr E. W. Wellington, a wealthy young Bostonian, and a graduate of Harvard, class of '74. He has 15,000 acres of land, 8,000 head of fine sheep—100 of the bucks represent $20,000—300 thorough bred cattle—Polled Angus, Jersey, Swiss, Short-horn and other breeds—and $75,000 worth of stone buildings. His mansion would not look out of place on the finest residence-street of any city, and his sheep-sheds, barns, wool-houses, boarding house and other buildings are of correspondi.ng excellence. The neighborhood is rich in a fine black sandstone, and Mr. Wellington's aged father showed me a marvelous collection of fossil leaves picked up here. They are all cretaceous, and of wonderful fineness. There is not a museum in the county that can match them.

At Wa Keeney I took up my rifle—thus far transported by express—and have been "testing" it ever since. Had good luck with antelopes from First View, Colo., to Deer Trail, and bagged more than I had at all expected but they were all well earned. To get one of the little fellows I had to crawl nearly three miles flat on my belly. The rattle-snakes have afforded even better sport, and I have killed seven. Only three were large enough to boast any considerable "strings," however. The largest and most pugnacious of these—whose spring missed my stooping nose by about four inches—now serves as a highly ornamental hat band on my sombrero.

Of course the whole journey across the plains of eastern Colorado was full of novelty to an untraveled Yankee. The comical little prairie dogs and their active towns; the buffalo skulls and trails and wallows; the prickly-pears, ball cactus, soap-weed, even the very grasses were new and interesting to me; but they would be an old story to the readers of the TIMES.

For accommodations between Wa-Keeney and Denver I had to rely chiefly upon the railroad section houses, where very fair meals, as a rule, are procurable at 25 and 35 cents each. I slept out every night, however, in a good blanket sleeping-bag, having a prejudice against these section house beds. Buggy-riding is very pleasant; but when it comes to buggy-bedding, please excuse yours truly. The nights are cold, but not uncomfortably so for healthy blood, and this sleeping on the matted buffalo grass is strength and health. Each morning as I rise from Mother Earth I seem to have realized the fable of Antæus. And so over the bare and thirsty plains, across the sandy beds of dried-up streams white with alkali, companioned by the squeaky prairie dogs and sung to sleep by the snarling coyotes, I came to Denver, the Queen City of the Plains.

The Georgia Wonder Explained.

Is she "magnetic?" Oh, yes; and that's what makes me mad. I regard it as reasonable, and, usually proper, that when a pretty, genteel, refined girl stands close in front of a man, looks him fitfully in the eyes, lays her soft palm on his hand and radiantly smiles, he should do her sweet will on the spot, no matter how violent the required exercise may be. Now, the relative positions which I have described are exactly those of the "magnetic" and the later ones. As they receive extra care, however, which is a necessity during the cold season, such fact may account for the greater growth of those hatched early. It is apparent, however, that when strict care and watchfulness are exercised with young chicks the percentage of loss will always be very small, no matter what the season of the year may be. We find that the actual cost per pound of raising chicks to the weight of two pounds, to be five cents, but this includes the heaviest feeding possible, with warmth and protection freely allowed. In other words, provided the chicks are kept warm, and not retarded by chills or exposure to dampness and cold we may force them as fast as we wish, with high feeding, and five cents will pay for every pound of meat so produced. We also find, in weighing chicks at stated intervals, in lots instead of singly, that they can be made to attain the weight of twelve ounces (three-quarters of a pound), in four weeks, and one pound and three-quarters in eight weeks. Individual chicks we brought to the weight of two pounds in eight weeks, but the average of the whole lot was one and three-quarter pounds, the cost of feed for the production of each one and three-quarter pounds being nine cents. As the chicks were worth fifty cents per pound at the time (being hatched early), the profit, in proportion to cost, was 900 per cent., but as the expenses for quarters, labor and heat must be deducted, the profit is therefore correspondingly reduced.

We do not claim that on ever y farm the chicks attain such weights in so short a period of time, for we paid them particular attention, but that is no more than all should do. It demonstrates what may be done, however, with care, and proves, as we have often claimed, that there is a larger profit from poultry, in proportion to cost, than from anything else on the farm, provided they are treated for profit, as in the case with crops and stock.

A Good Milker.

In reply to the query, "What quantity of milk should a cow give to be considered profitable?" a well-known dairyman answers: 4,500 pounds; 2,800 pounds for the first 100 days, 1,000 pounds for the 100 days following, and 700 pounds between the completion at that time and drying off. Professor Brown, of Canada, in reply to a similar question, puts the figures at 4,000 for 200 days, and as much as possible in the subsequent 165 days, and that every 100 pounds of milk should make three and one-half pounds of butter. Leaving out of consideration the performances of phenomonal cows, accurate records are at hand of native cows with records of from 6,500 to 8,000 pounds in the season, which shows that a steady advance is being made in the yields of our cows. The improvement is very slow, and will continue to be until farmers raise their best heifer cows, and have the sire with a mother of milking strains to more perfectly establish the milking habit.

Jersey Cows.

Philadelphia Record.]

But although the cows themselves are selected as the fittest for the purpose, such tests are made under the most favorable conditions only. The food is rich, varied, of the best quality and given plentiful—but this is the duty of every farmer. The butter cows are selected for their butter qualities alone, and not with a view to securing a large quantity of milk. Their beef qualities are entirely discarded, and their future value to the butcher is not considered. The Jerseys are active, small in size and mature early, the heifers often producing calves before they are a year and a half old. They are distinct from the Guernseys, not being as large, and possessing a more delicate shape and finer bone. There are no Alderney cows in this country, the gilt-edged butter so styled being from the Jerseys and Guernseys. The use of a Jersey bull among a common herd makes a marked change in the character of the offspring, and but a short time is required to largely increase the value of the stock, while the yield of butter is more than doubled.

Fast Walking Horses.

Our Country Home well insists that the most useful gait is the walk; at that pace the labor of the world is performed and the daily bread of the children of men is assured to them. In his strong farm harness, with well stuffed, smooth and carefully fitted collar, the horse is put to the plow, the harrow, the cultivator, or the reaper. The millions of acres of our farms are walked over to produce the prodigious yields of breadstuffs and cotton to which the greater part of civilized men look for food and raiment. The heavy loads drawn from the farmer's granary to the mill, the railway station, or the warehouse of the merchant, are hauled at a walk. The faster and more elastic the step the greater the saving of time, money and patience. T ough this is well-known to all the world, few men in breeding, training or buying a horse, keep in mind that quick walking is the best gift of nature, or the first accomplishment of art, and insist upon it as a point adding essential value to the animal. Even our fast work on the road must be constantly relieved by walking, and nothing is more annoying to the horseman than to see the rapid trot suddenly degenerate into a motion slow as that by which a wounded snake drags himself through the dust.

Our public has been instructed that fast trotting is hereditary in certain families; temperament is surely hereditary, and a lively disposition, with elastic movement in both sire and dam, is quite certain to be transmitted to their offspring. But even if a colt is naturally sluggish in disposition he may be assisted, improved and his rapidity of action promoted by a careful driver or trainer.

In halter-breaking the work should be accompanied by rapid movement on the part of the handler, who, though he should not be nervous, should not be sluggish. The saying, "Who drives fat oxen should himself be fat," expresses "the eternal fitness of things," and in teaching the colt, the disposition of the man has much effect upon the character of the animal. Patience is the best quality of the horse-trainer: "How poor are they that have not patience." Plenty of time must be allowed to every colt, and it must be fully understood that all improvements will be by slow gradations. When a colt is broken to harness it is a common custom to put him by the side of some quiet, old animal, and this example is extended to moderate his youthful exuberance. Here is where great loss may be made or great gain accrue. No colt should ever be trained by the side of a slow, dull walker. A quick, smart horse should invariably be selected as the companion in harness, of the learner, or he will fall into the bad habits of his mate. Colts are excellent in the plow or harrow. Some of the finest race-horses and hunters that have become famous in England, first developed their muscles in plowing; they learn to go it kindly, and this work, on light land, is the very best in which to teach that quick, springing action which is the crowning glory of the farmer's horse.

The Alaska Glacier.

Philadelphia Record.]

Alaska's magnificent glacier drags slowly on its dreary way at the probable rate of a quarter of a mile per year. At the face or front it presents a perpendicular wall of ice 500 feet thick, and varies from three to ten miles in width, extending back to the north probably 150 miles. Hundreds of tons of ice are probably falling off the face of this great glacier every few minutes into the bay, splashing the water more than fifty feet high and rolling up waves that toss the ships like small toy-boys. The appearance of the ice, the most pure in the world, is dazzling to the eye, all the tints of blue, from the most delicate to the bluest indigo, being represented. The top surface abounds with little hillocks and miniature mountains of ice. Great areas of earth, gravel and large rocks the size of a house are carried on the top of these ice fields from place to place as this great floe, more than a thousand feet of solid ice, moves toward the sea.

Notes.

The grazing of land by a mixed stock of cattle, sheep and horses results in the land being more evenly grazed than where one kind only is kept. Where, however, many sheep are grazed with cattle, as they pick out all the finest of the grasses and clovers with their narrow noses, the cattle will not thrive so well.

A writer in the Prairie Farmer proposes to have a bed of clean, sharp sand, twelve to twenty feet square, inclosed and roofed over, for his horses to roll in. Rain and snow, he says, should be excluded at all times, and the bed should be raised to prevent water from running into the inclosure.

Charles Downing, the veteran pomologist, regards the Hubbardston Nonsuch as the most perfect apple he knows of, because it has just the amount of sugar and acid for an eating or cooking apple, without any addition of commercial sugar.

No matter how sloppy the food is given to pigs, they should have daily a good supply of clean, fresh water. This is especially needed in summer for pigs kept in pens and with little green food.

An experienced horticulturist says that fresh cider should be boiled and skimmed completely before being bunged up. In the spring, if vinegar is desired, place it in a warm, sunny room, and add six pounds of diluted brown sugar to the barrel, leaving the barrel open for three or four weeks, according to the acidity of the cider. The exposure to the air admits oxygen and changes the alcohol into acetic acid or vinegar.

The following is said by the American Stock Journal to be an infallible remedy for chicken cholera: Make a mixture of two ounces each of red pepper, alum, resin and flower of sulphur, and put it in their food in proportions of one tablespoonful to three pints of scalded meal. In severe cases give about one-third of a teaspoonful in a meal pellet once a day to each fowl, putting a small lump of alum in their drinking water. The writer says: "I have tried the above ingredients with marked success; have cured fowls in the last stages of the disease. I make it a practice now to give my fowls some of it once or twice a week, and there are no symptoms of any disease among them."

At the North Carolina State Exposition one man exhibits a female wardrobe erected by his own needle and thread, and another has a bed-quilt with 6,000 pieces in it.

Lotus Land.

A lonely strip of coast where golden sands
Stretch dreamily into the far-off blue;
A drowsy wind, the breath of Southern lands,
And seas of opal hue.

A glorious, wide expanse of narrow riverbed,
Whose tender blue is flecked with clouds of light;
A fleet of boats, with dusky sails outspread,
Fast dropping out of sight.

Tall, bottling cliffs that purple shadows throw
Athwart still pools where ocean treasures hide;
Low undertones—which ever clearer grow—
From the in-coming tide.

A perfect peace! Here never comes the strife
That ever waits upon the race for gold;
Here in still grooves goes on the march of life,
With simple joys untold.

Here sweet desire would have no always stay—
Far from the city's toil, its passions strong,
And in contentment live through life's brief day,
Unto its even song.

But Duty, ever jealous, cries "Not yet!
Thy place is still upon the busy mart;
Thou must go forth, and earn with labor's sweat,
The wishes of thy heart."

And so, at Duty's call, do I depart,
And leave these joys regretfully behind;
But as a vision bright, within my heart,
Their beauty is enshrined.

Susan Sunshine's House and Home Papers.

Yesterday morning broke as clear and beautiful as if the world were young. Fresh breezes blew from the hills and pure airs were wafted from the seas. The pines nodded their green needles and the eucalypti lifted their stately heads to catch the first glory of the sunrise; birds twittered amid the green boughs and the morning was fragrant with sweet allysium and heliotrope and other blossoming plants. Beyond the streets of the city the river ran on its way to the sea along the base of the heights—which overshadow it—and the morning was like a dewy June's, full of the beauty of the land where the year never grows old, but dies, as it is born, amid fragrance and freshness. I was to have company to dinner, and there were many things to be done about house in order to be in complete readiness for my guests, yet I lingered for a while at my open window, for there was so much in the view that lifted me out from self, so much that was suggestive and soothing. I was strengthened and cheered by it, and made ready for the day's duties.

My house was in order when the afternoon sun looked in at my dining-room windows and touched with an added brightness the flowers upon the long tables, and upon the mantle and corner stand, and the canary warbled in the cage by the open window. I appreciate the desirability of many windows and a plenty of light in the house, and I must confess to being a little vain of the numerous windows in my home, opening as they do upon such a variety of pretty views, and letting a good deal of out-doors into the house. I was looking out at the November roses, and reaching down to snatch a bud for my hair when I caught sight of my friend Mrs. Merryweil coming up the hill. She has crept up by that name thirties, but she has a girl's heart in her breast yet, as far as cheerfulness and love of the beautiful goes

He Did His Duty.

He sank, with throttle grasped, just where he stood,
To do the utmost that a brave man could,
And die, if needful, as a true man should.

Men sleep above him, women dropped their tears,
On that poor wreck, beyond all hopes or fears,
Lost in the strength and glory of his years.

What heard they? Lo, the ghastly lips of pain,
Dead to all thought save duty's, moved again—
"Put out the signal for the other train!"

Oh, grand, supreme endeavor, not in vain
That last brave act of failing tongue and brain!
Freighted with life the downward rushing train

Following the wrecked one, as wave follows wave,
Obeyed the warning which the dead lips gave,
Others he saved—himself he could not save.

Nay, the last life was saved. He is not dead!
Who in his record still the earth shall tread,
With God's clear sunrise shining round his head.

JARVIS.

BY MARY ADAMS JAMESON.

XVII.

THE TWO SLEEPERS.

Ellen's disappearance was the "nine days wonder" at Glenfern. There were the most extravagant rumors afloat, not without darker hints of a possible something, which not even the boldest dared to quite give utterance in speech. There are as many ways of looking at things as there are people's eyes to see. All had their theories and opinions about the matter, and not a few were ready to announce them to anyone who might chance to listen. Some ambitious matres familias with marriageable daughters; and several maiden ladies of more or less antiquity, who had been angling a long time to no purpose, and who simpered, blushed and looked demurely down their noses, like a girl of sixteen, whenever Daniels glanced their way, were not slow to give it as their conviction, that it served him quite right. It was absurd enough that a man of his age should marry any chit of a girl, scarcely out of the nursery; but it was enough to shock respectable people out of their senses to think that Daniels, with his position and wealth, would deliberately choose a wife from the scum of the earth when there was plenty of "blue blood" at his hand. Had he not brought her to Carringford a little vagabond outcast, that he had picked up somewhere in his periodic migrations, no longer than six years ago? The girl had probably gone back to the low state where she belonged; and for their part he was good riddance of her. Miss Jerusha Stitt found sufficient material to keep her tongue wagging for many a long day. During this exciting period she was as nearly ubiquitous as a person could well be in the flesh. Her gaunt form was here, there and everywhere. Her harsh, shrill voice was a little more rasping than usual in her eagerness to let some folks know that Jerusha Stitt was right after all.

"I declar ter goodness! Didn't I tell yer long ago how 't 'd all end? That no good 'd come o' that air man a-gallervanterin 'round the country, with no pertikler business, an' keepin' his goins an' comins as sly 's a fox? An' our min'ster's daughter was a-goin' ter be one o' the bridesmaids! I wouldn' ha' b'lieved it with her mar not a-year dead an' her par in feeble health an' the small sciery we kin 'ford ter give 'em. 'Stead o' behavin' with becomin' mod'sty an' declinin', she was only too glad to rig herself up like—like the-at-er folk an' show herself off, the vain hussy! I declar ter goodness! My blood biles whenever I think o' that air girl a-orderin' me out o' our own Parsonage with the air o' Victory herself. An' all bekase I, Jerusha Stitt, 'n the kindness o' my heart, let her know what some folks was a-sayin' 'bout their 'strav'gant livin'. Girls are not what they use ter be 'n my young days—lemme tell you that!" the green calash vanishing into the street, only to re-appear again at some unexpected time and place.

The rector and his family, who had deeply loved the girl, were very reticent upon the subject. They admitted that the girl had acted unwisely, perhaps foolishly; but at the same time affirmed that Ellen was mature far beyond her years, and with her splendid education, she was fully competent to make her own way in the world, wherever she might be. Notwithstanding this outward shielding of their favorite, at heart they had grave doubts and fears that all was not exactly as it should be. Helen Campbell alone faced all these rumors with a clear brow and a heart singularly free from distrust, considering, as we are bound to say, that all the known facts were strongly against Ellen. Her trust in her friend was absolute. She never wavered in her conviction, that no whim had shaped Ellen's course; but that it was a matter with her of conscience and duty, and, wherever she was, she was engaged in some noble, legitimate work. She could not quite see how, but she felt that the end would fully justify her friend.

Daniels had given Jarvis no instructions how to act under these peculiarly trying circumstances. Possibly he had forgotten it; more probably, however, he was utterly indifferent what the public verdict might be (at least as far as he himself was concerned), and knew Jarvis would make known to the household all that was necessary to be disclosed. Jarvis did assume the responsibility of acting for the absent master. That same evening he assembled the servants and announced to them in the presence of the housekeeper, that there would be no wedding; the reason, he said, was known only to the parties interested and did not concern him or them; that Miss Ellen had left Carringford, and, as he knew she had prepared herself for teaching, he presumed that was her purpose. That their master had gone on a long journey and he (Jarvis) would conduct affairs as usual during his absence. There was loud lamentation, for Ellen had been dearly loved by them all, and, to their thinking, she was as completely lost to them as though she had been dead. Dinah bewailed the ill luck of her dear "massa Philip," but most of all the loss of the black silk, which "dat sweet chile" had promised her. Her disappointment, however, was assuaged when the housekeeper handed her the next morning a package addressed: "For Aunt Dinah," which had been found in Ellen's room. She opened it and found the dress-pattern of silk.

"De blessed lam!" she cried, her tears falling fast. "I's gwine ter keep it till she come back; mebbe ole Dinah 'll hab a chance ter war it at her weddin' yet."

The same night that Jarvis had made his announcement, after all had retired, the housekeeper went her usual rounds to see that the doors and windows were securely fastened. Passing the drawing-room door, the light of her candle fell full upon the picture over the mantel. She stopped abruptly; then, as if some force impelled her, slowly crossed the threshold and stood in front of the painting, gazing up at it with a fixed intentness. She put up one hand and touched a leaf of the bronze-gilt frame. Had her finger accidentally come in contact with the hidden spring? The canvas slowly swung outward, revealing the portrait within. The woman started back as if in astonishment and pressed one hand to her heart, as that vision of loveliness flashed before her. After regarding it for some time, holding the candle now on this side, then on that, to get the best light on it, she swung the canvas to its place, but to her surprise it immediately swung back again. She pushed it shut and held it a moment, but it would not stay. Remembering she had put her finger on a certain leaf, when it had sprung open, she again touched the leaf and the canvas swung to with a sharp click. With one more glance at the painting she passed quickly up the stairs and directly to Ellen's room. She lifted the bridal finery with shaking fingers and a face that was ghastly pale. She examined every article minutely, then carefully folded them and laid them away in the trunk, together with the casket of jewels. This done, she closed and locked the door.

A week later at the close of a lovely day the sun was setting with unusual splendor. Helen had been on her "beat," as she called her work among the poor, and had just returned home.

She passed directly to her father's room, as she always did after any absence. She saw him asleep in his easy-chair, with his head laid back against the cushion and one arm resting upon the table, while the other was round Caddy, who was lying against his breast, also fast asleep in the sweet abandon of childhood. The yellow curls made a striking contrast to the white hair above them.

Through the partially closed blinds the dying sun threw a halo of glory about her father's head.

Afterward when the mystery of that hour stood bare in the light of a revelated future, she recalled the scene to the minutest detail, and carried it with her to her grave. Remembering that Caddy's weight was usually too much for her father's strength, she softly entered the room and stooped to lift his arm from the sleeping child. The hand she touched was icy-cold. She sprang erect with a swift glance to his face. It wore the deepening smile of supernal peace. His earthly sun had set — night had closed about him, but his soul already saw the dawn of that new day which is eternal. Yet she did not know. The heart is so slow to grasp adverse truth. She laid her hand upon his brow—that, too, was icy-cold. She cried, "Dear father!" but he did not answer her. Something dreadful must indeed have happened to him, that he could not hear her voice. How she lived through the next hour she never knew.

She snatched the sleeping Caddy and laid him upon the lounge; then sped for Dr. Clifford, two blocks away, who was her father's physician in Daniel's absence. When he came in ten minutes later she was rubbing her father's hands, trying to get some warmth into them. She had not yet grasped the thought that it was the frosts of death upon him. To the practiced eye of the kind-hearted old doctor one glance at the quiet face was sufficient. But to gain a little time in order not to break the truth to her too suddenly, he laid his fingers upon the wrist, then his hands upon the heart.

"It's no use, dear child; to try to warm those hands," he said; then added reverently with one finger uplifted—"your father is up yonder."

"What, sir?" dropping the hand she was chafing. "Do you mean that —he—is—dead?"

"Yes, dear child! your father is forever at rest."

She made no cry or moan. Some natures hug grief too tightly for words or tears. She stood with a white, awed face, the clear eyes gazing at him with mournful fixedness, trying to take in the sudden awfulness of the tidings he had brought her. As the terrible truth fully dawned upon her, she turned and stretching her arms toward her dead, she cried with a dry, tearless sob.

"Father, dear father!" How can we live without thee?"

He gently led her from the room. During the interval before the funeral she went about the house attending to her duties as usual, white and still, like a frozen lily, from the strain of inward pressure. When urged to eat something, she would mournfully shake her head. She felt no sense of hunger; she felt like one turned to stone. She knew her heart was a fountain of tears, but they all seemed frozen within her. She was very gentle with the twins, understanding and sympathizing with their frantic grief and doing all in her power to soothe and quiet them. Caddy's frequent questioning, "Wot 'as 'em done wiv my papa, sisser Nellie?" was like a sharp knife piercing her heart. During the service at the church she sat like a statue, and called forth Jerusha Stitt's indignant protest: "I declar ter goodness! It's dreadful, how oufelin that air girl is!"

Once at the grave, when the clods began to rattle upon the coffin, a long shudder crept over her; that was all. How infinitely kinder is the custom now, of permitting the friends to depart before that dreadful thud-thud drops upon the coffin and on, stricken hearts as well! After the sad homecoming, that dreary after-time which is so desolate, Caddy crept into Helen's lap, and, with the tears standing in his great blue eyes, said pitcously:

"Caddy's dot no papa now at 'ome, 'as he, sisser Nellie?"

At that Helen broke down completely and sobbed so violently as to frighten the child and the rest who were present. The old Doctor, who, through the whole, trying ordeal, had been very anxious and uneasy about her, now walked in, and, seeing the state of things, ordered them all out of the room. When he had closed the door he said peremptorily: "For God's sake! let her alone; let her grief spend itself. It is the only thing that will save her from death or madness."

Ten days later Helen received a letter from Daniels. It ran thus:

"My Poor Child:—I have heard of your loss. In such an hour words have an empty ring to them. Yet you cannot doubt my profound sympathy, and if I can be of any use to you, do not hesitate to let me know at once. In about a month my cottage near the rectory will be vacant. You will oblige me by moving into it as soon thereafter as you wish, and by occupying it as long as you choose. Meanwhile as you are doing her share of my parish work, you will hereafter receive her salary also. I have instructed Jarvis to pay you one hundred ($100) dollars per month, and to do any other service for you that you may desire. Do not hesitate to call upon him at any time.

Your sincere friend,
PHILIP DANIELS."

XXIII.

FACE TO FACE.

Two years had passed since Ellen disappeared from Carringford. They had left their visible traces on at least three members of that household. Daniels had made every effort to find some clue to the whereabouts of the absent one; he had even resorted to the employment of a celebrated detective, but as yet nothing had ever come of it. He did not undertake these measures with the purpose of again pressing his suit, or even of intruding his presence upon her. He would have scorned to do either. But he wished to keep track of her, that he might know she never wanted for anything. He had spent many a sleepless night tortured with the thought that she might be sick and suffering, or in utter destitution. They had told him she had taken very little clothing with her, but it was impossible for him to know whether she had any money in her possession when she left. He had always allowed her a liberal amount of pin money, but as he was not aware how she disposed of it, he could not presumably know whether she had a reserve on hand, or went forth into the wide world unknown and utterly destitute. He lived in a daily torture of doubt and suspense. It was a dreary, dismal morning. There had been a driving storm of wind and rain, but the clouds were breaking, and the sun was dimly shining behind them. His first thought was, "Is she safely housed!" Then in a voice of profound mournfulness he exclaimed: "Ah, my love, my little love! Why did you not trust me—confide in me? How much of anguish we might both have been spared! I would have sacredly guarded your youth and innocence. I would as sacredly have respected your belief concerning our marriage, however erroneous it might have been. If I could only know that you are well and comfortably quartered, or even quietly sleeping in some wayside hillock, I would be comparatively happy and at rest. But to know absolutely nothing—to be forever wrestling with doubts and fears, forever dogged by a shadowy, possible horror;—it is slowly wearing my life away. My Father!" the eyes reverently uplifted, "I cannot yet quite say 'Thy will be done,' but teach me in Thine own time and way to do and suffer all things for Thy sake——"

"He will—He will, sir!" broke in Jarvis with joyful exultation. "And may the day be not far distant. Then ken I say with Simeon of old, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.'"

Jarvis had knocked, but Daniels had not noticed it. Thinking that the voice he heard was a summons to enter, he had opened the door and gone in just in time to hear Daniels's fervent supplication. Jarvis was now Daniels's private secretary and they were of necessity thrown much together. He had changed much since that eventful day on yonder mountain plateau. The dark brown hair was thickly seamed with gray; and the rapt, introverted look that his face used to wear only in moments of strong excitement, had grown habitual to it, as though his soul was daily feasted on invisible viands.

But the change in Daniels was even more marked. Perhaps it was owing, in a measure, to the absence of that sublime faith and ever-abiding peace which were Jarvis's chief characteristics. At all events, he was but the shadow of his former self. The once erect figure was slightly stooped and the raven hair was more plentifully sifted with snow. His proud face was thin and worn, and the eyes were preternaturally large and full of shadows, albeit they still kept their olden flesh. The constant fever of heart and brain was rapidly doing its work. He still carried the haughty bearing of old, but it was softened and mellowed into a winning graciousness by an indefinable, indescribable process which was slowly, but surely, revolutionizing his whole nature, and which, in orthodox parlance, is called the "work of grace in the heart."

Shortly after Jarvis' entrance there was a quick tap at the door and Dinah thrust in her turbaned head, saying hurriedly—

"'Massa Philip, come quick! Missus Sauns done hab one ob her bad spells agin; she very bad, sir. Spec she's gwine fer ter die. She wants ter see you."

"Look here, Dinah! Don't indulge in any such speculations as that where she can hear you, and don't carry that doleful visage back into her presence. Remember that cheerfulness is as good as physic in the sick room."

"Lor, now, honey! trus' old Dinar for dat."

"Poor woman!" said Daniels, as Dinah retreated. "I fear she is doomed. I thought the last attack she could not survive another."

"Is she so bad as that?" asked Jarvis.

"Yes! Her health has been steadily declining for the past two years. She has suffered from angina pectoris ever since she came to Carringford; but of late these attacks have been much more frequent and violent, each succeeding one leaving her more exhausted and nearer the end. Nothing can be done for her, except to somewhat mitigate her excruciating distress."

While talking he had been preparing some medicine and now wended his way to the sick room.

Dinah withdrew as her master entered and waited in the sitting-room till she should be called. The patient had just passed through a severe paroxysm and was lying back, panting, upon the pillows. It was a face comparatively young; but another hand than Time's had chiseled heavy shadows upon it. You could not look at it without a heart-throb of infinite compassion. What heavy mallet-hand had seized and twisted her life, as the hurricane twists the lithe, young oak, was the question, whose answer forever baffled your search. Was the visible verdict of the years the inevitable effect of a transgressed law? If so, by herself or by another? Be this as it may, life for this woman had been a daily torture, and yet she had read its pages, one by one, humbly, bravely, sublimely. Is there a heroism grander than this? In the loneliest ruins we will sometimes find the rarest and sweetest flowers. So a physical wreck may still be the casket of a perfectly symmetrical soul. And when a woman bravely and conscientiously takes up the consequences of her own or another's wrong-doing, and loyally—ay! and royally wears them, she has made the fullest atonement within her power.

As Daniels sat down by the bed and felt her pulse, the violet eyes met his with such a look of wistful entreaty, that, interpreting it as a wish to know the true state of her case, he said at once:

"It is my duty, Mrs. Sauns, to tell you that your life is in great danger, and if you have any matters to arrange or messages to send, you had better attend to it without delay. I will see that your instructions are faithfully carried out."

"I know I shall never see the dawn of another earthly day; but oh! I feel like a tired child, so glad to lie down and rest. Yet there is a statement I must make before I go hence and to this end must husband all my strength."

"I will give you a stimulant to strengthen you," crossing the room to a small table by the window.

He poured out a little wine into a glass and turned round; the glass fell from his hand to the floor, shivered to atoms. He stood for one moment frozen with horror. The sick woman had raised herself upon her elbow and was gazing at him with a look of mournful anguish mingled with tenderest love. Her dark hair was gone and in its stead there rippled about her brow and shoulders the well remembered mass of palest gold. With the bound of a wild beast he sprang forward, and cried with burning, hissing scorn: "Woman! Fiend! How dared you again desecrate my home with your foul presence! You, the Lamia of my ruined life! you, the Pariah of my loathesome past! You, ah, ha! I see clearly your infamous plot. It was you, she-devil, that stole my one ewe-lamb from my bosom. By God! If only I could hurl you to the lowest hell, where the torments of the damned would clutch you forever!"

He glared down at her with blood-shot eyes like a demon of hell. All the agony he had suffered for over a score of years was concentrated in his voice and glance. He clutched her shoulder and shook her like a despicable thing—then flung her from him back upon the pillows. She lay in a deep swoon. A deadly purpose had crept into his eyes. Once he had hunted for years to be avenged of his wrongs. Should she escape him now! True! she was likely to die, but there was many a "slip twixt the cup and the lip." He had snatched her many times out of the very jaws of death. It was therefore possible that she might yet live; and he swore by the heavens above him that she should expiate the double wrong she had done him, only by her death. He was scarcely conscious at the time of any other motive than this. But underlying all—the prime lever, that lifted him to the verge of crime, was the half-dormant thought, that should this woman live, he and Ellen would be forever divided. He crossed the room to the stand where the medicines stood. Only a few extra drops from that vial of blood-red liquid and she would never waken again on earth. Without the tremor of a muscle he lifted the fatal vial and counted out the number of drops. It is a nice point in medico-science to tell with perfect exactness the amount necessary to prolong life or to end it!

There was a quick whirring of wings in the air above him. The dark and bright angels were wrestling for the soul of this man, tempted beyond his strength. Would the good or the evil in him prevail? Suddenly the rigid face relaxed, and the murderous hand shook as with the palsy.

God had reached a hand through space and touched him with His finger. He flung the spoon and its contents far from him, and without glancing toward the bed, passed swiftly from the room. As he crossed the sitting-room, he said to Dinah, with a backward toss of the head toward the room he had just quitted:

"Go! attend to her at once; she has swooned. Give her the usual restoratives, and let no one enter the room but yourself. Stop a moment," as she had partially opened the door. "Prepare yourself for a great shock. She is—Lillian Thorne."

He did not wait to see the effect of his announcement on Dinah, but rushed headlong down the stairs; a few moments later he and Lion were dashing madly down the avenue, and with reckless daring cleared the massive iron gate. Tony gave his customary wh-e-e-w! and looked after him with troubled face. "I knows de berry debil's to pay, when massa rides like dat."

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS
As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure." "R. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE.—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A one pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

Printing and Binding.

There is nothing in the Printing and Binding line which the Times-Mirror Printing, Binding and Ruling House, the oldest and largest in Southern California, is not prepared to execute in a manner equal to that of any office in the State. Books, magazines and pamphlets bound in Turkish leather, Morocco, cloth, sheepskin, or in any style desired. Our work is guaranteed to be equal to that done in San Francisco.

LOCAL DASHES.

Mr. Porter, of Porter Brothers & Co., is quite ill.

The farmers are asking $10 a ton for the best baled barley hay.

Hon. J. F. Janes, with a carpet-bag in his hand, was seen wending his way to the depot yesterday. It is supposed by his friends that he wants to be surely on hand when the Legislature convenes.

To-morrow the city delinquent tax list will be delivered to the Council. Those who have not paid up will have to contribute five per cent. penalty, and the cost of advertising.

The railroad company has decided to issue round trip tickets, good for sixty days, to the New Orleans exposition, the price having been fixed at $140. This is first-class, but undoubtedly there will be cheaper excursion rates.

The grass is up already in all portions of the county, as a result of the recent rain. In some places the volunteer grain is reported to be growing rapidly. Another rain in two or three weeks will cover every barren hill with verdure.

Sutherland Hutton shipped a car-load of Los Angeles raised bucks to El Paso, Texas, a few weeks ago. Los Angeles is sending a great many thoroughbred cows, sheep and other stock to various portions of the country.

Mr. John H. Stewart, an account of whose experience in raising pampas plumes was given some time since in the Times, has finished up his work for the season. From three acres of land on Figueroa street he gathered and sold 60,000 plumes, realizing about $2000.

At the late election the oldest voter was Francisco Garcia, whose age as given in the Great Register is one hundred and three years. Mr. Garcia is still quite active, and able to do chores as well as many a younger man. He cast his vote for Blaine, Logan and Markham.

A great improvement on the east side of the river is the cutting down of the First-street hill, which will make the grade as easy as that of any hill in the city. When this work and the approaches to the bridge are completed, this route to Boyle Heights will be the best.

A man under the influence of liquor, while driving up Commercial street yesterday, ran carelessly into the buggy of Mr. Fitzwilliam, who resides on South Main street. Mr. Fitzwilliam's buggy and harness were damaged to the extent of $25.

The bee men of Los Angeles met yesterday at the Council Chamber and decided to make an exhibit of honey and honey products at the World's Fair at New Orleans. It is expected that the apiarists of San Diego, San Bernardino, Ventura and Santa Barbara counties will co-operate. A man will be sent with the exhibit.

The working men of this city are very indignant at the action of the Council in not providing in the contract with the San Francisco Bridge Company that at least part of the laborers on the bridges should be hired here. All the wages went to men imported from San Francisco.

Yesterday afternoon at about 5 o'clock, when the streets were most crowded, a horse attached to a light buggy broke loose on Spring street near the Postoffice and rushed to Main, jumped the sewer excavation and went down Commercial to Los Angeles street and from thence along Aliso street to the river. The outfit was captured near there, not the slightest damage having been done.

Wm. Lacy so long connected with the First National Bank of Los Angeles as Cashier, has resigned his position which has been taken by Mr. J. M. Elliot, formerly Assistant Cashier. Mr. Lacy will now devote his attention to the business of his large hardware establishment on Los Angeles street.

Prophet Potts has by a singular coincidence lost his power of foretelling the weather correctly since he abandoned the old flag and joined the prohibition wing of the whisky Democracy. Now when he announces a storm for a certain day the clerk of the weather deliberately selects any other date than that indicated. Mr. Potts will therefore have to haul down his sign, "The Only True Pluvial Prophet."

N. Levering, the veteran bee man, was in town yesterday to see if he was elected to the office of Justice of the Peace of Santa Monica. He had not learned the result at last accounts, but thought he had some show, as he was originally nominated by the Democrats and then indorsed by the Republicans, Prohibitionists and Butler men. His only anxiety was about the Belva Lockwood party, which had not been heard from.

WILMINGTON.

Life and Death by the Seashore.

Correspondence of the Times.]

WILMINGTON, Nov. 15.—The funeral of Mrs. Perry Wildman was largely attended at the Presbyterian Church last Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. Mr. Boag her former pastor, officiating. Mrs. Wildman came here from Arizona a few weeks ago for a visit, having been an old-time resident here. She was ill when she came, and she gradually grew worse till she died, last Monday evening. Her disease was cancer. Mr. Wildman has returned to Arizona, leaving his only daughter, Lizzie, a girl of thirteen, here for the winter to attend school.

Work has been resumed on the unfinished Episcopal Church here, one of the members having donated 2,000 feet of lumber and another the work of putting it on.

We had a fine rain here Wednesday night, and nearly everyone was ready for it. Grain is still coming in large quantities, and the quality is generally good.

Fred. Dell, who has been on the sick list for a few days is, around again.

"Old Baptiste," the octogenarian Indian who wears a Blaine hat, is quite sick and will probably die. SUB.

SPECIAL AUCTION SALE
OF
Colusa County Lands
Saturday, Nov. 29, at 12 M.,
AT WILLOWS, COLUSA CO.—RAIN OR SHINE
25,000 ACRES
CHOICE FARMING and WHEAT LANDS ON CREDIT and easy terms of payment.

This large body of land has been cropped in wheat and raised this year on 7,000 acres 180,000 bushels, and will be offered in tracts of 160 acres, 320 more, and one stock range of 8,960 acres. The land has four towns—Willows, Logandale, Delavan and Norman—on it; railroad runs through the land; part is in summer fallow and part volunteer.

Colusa lands have been held in large tracts, raising wheat; when sold in small farms will produce anything in general farming or fruit. Land-seekers can have tickets at $ 00 round trip from San Francisco or way stations from now to day of sale, to give ample time to examine the land and make their selection. An excursion train will leave San Francisco on FRIDAY, 4 P. M., November 28, to connect with sale, also at $5.00. This cheap fare is expressly given to show land-seekers what Colusa County is and what it can do.

W. G. Murdock, at bank in Willows, or De Jarnatt & Crane at Colusa, will take all land-seekers free of charge over the land.

Special attention is called to this sale and to this land as offering a rare opportunity for a small or large farmer, or to get a home on easy terms and prices within reach of all, from $8 to $25 per acre. This land has been subdivided into small tracts for the express purpose of attracting immigration, and will be sold at the very lowest rates to actual settlers.

Colusa county is now offering a portion of its best land cheaper than any other part of the State, and the first buyers will get the advantage of this great reduction.

TERMS OF SALE.—One-third cash, balance 1, 2 and 3 years, at 7½ per cent. per annum interest. The summer fallowed and volunteered land will pay the first credit payment the coming season.

Tickets must be bought of us. 22 Montgomery street. Bond $3.00 by postal or otherwise and tickets by mail or express. All inquiries in San Francisco to be made at

Dr. E. A. Clark, formerly of Michigan, but for the past three years a resident of San Diego, has arrived in this city and opened an office for the practice of his profession at No. 24 South Spring street. Dr. Clark has been one of the most popular and successful physicians in our neighboring city, and has a large circle of acquaintances here, who will be glad to learn that he has decided to locate here. In this connection it will be proper to add that he has a number of letters of introduction from prominent citizens of San Diego, among them being a very cordial one from Bryant Howard, formerly of this city, now President of the Consolidated National Bank of San Diego; also one from Dr. G. W. Barnes, late Professor of Cleveland Medical College, with whom he has been associated in practice during his residence in San Diego, in which he expresses himself in the highest terms of his personal merits and professional standing. The Doctor will undoubtedly find an extensive field for usefulness here.

THE DEMOCRATS.

The Procession and Speaking Last Night.

CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS HONORED.

Some Elegant and Refined Transparencies —A Few Delicately-worded Speeches — Fire-eating "Gauge" Orates.

The Democrats had a procession last night. It was in honor of the election of Cleveland and Hendricks. The parade was not as large as some they had during the campaign, but was more enthusiastic. In the unanimous language of their speakers, the Democrats were too full for utterance. Their cup of joy seemed running over. The loss of the Court House is more than made up by the gain of the White House. Their speakers were more moderate in their expressions, and everything betokened the fact that for the nonce the Democracy are supremely happy. In preparation for the parade the old canvass was stripped from their frames, and new transparencies painted especially for the occasion.

THE PROCESSION

formed on Temple and Main streets at 8 o'clock and marched for an hour through the principal streets. Sidney Lacey was Grand Marshal, and was assisted by a large number of Aids.

One singular feature was the presence of Justice Ranney, elect, and Capt. John Hall, both Republicans, in the line. They were paying bets which they had made, that the losing side should pay for the hack and ride with the winning side. They took their medicine like men.

The City Band made its first appearance in silver-plated helmets.

The transparencies did not indicate that the faculty of invention had been exercised to any great extent. The largest one was Cleveland's head on a cock's body, rather a caricature on their own man. One read, "The Courthouse for the White House!" another, "Youth of the Republic, Remember." It is supposed to refer to Grover's youthful remembrance of Maria. "Conkling and Curtis, shake," was suggestive. The worst one of all was one whose four sides read: "John A. Logan surrendered to Thomas A. Hendricks. Let us smile. Water and whiskey don't mix. Blaine surrenders to Cleveland." The first is damnable. The second is rough on the Democratic allies—the Prohibitions. The third is a Democratic axiom. The fourth is questionable. Some live chickens were carried on the top of poles, and seemed to endure the torture very well. Some twenty horsemen with red sashes were scared up to make a "Cleveland Cavalry," the first of the campaign. The omnipresent fish-horn was present in all its glory, and made up for hoarse voices.

THE SPEAKING.

At nine o'clock the procession dispersed, and the meeting in front of the Downey block was called to order by Stephen M. White, who announced W. Hellman as President, and John T. Gaffey as Secretary of the meeting and a long list of vice-presidents.

Mayor C. E. Thom was the first speaker. He said that with the great victory were some sad things, among which was the loss of the Court House and Del Valle.

Stephen M. White arose to speak, but his stentorian tones were drowned by the more stentorian tones of the fishhorns. He finally quieted the fishhorns, and saluted his auditors that the administration of Cleveland and Hendricks will not be in the interest of any one section. Of course Mr. White has consulted Grover about this, and knows exactly his future policy. He read a telegram announcing the election of Charlie Skinner by 30 majority.

R. F. Del Valle said that "the smoke of battle" has dispersed, revealing the magnificent form of Grover on the rocks of the Constitution. The Mason and Dixon's line is to be obliterated.

Col. J. F. Godfrey got up and proposed three cheers, on general principles. Then he got three cheers for Cleveland and Hendricks, whom he said were the first Democrats elected for twenty-four years, except Tilden. He said: "If you Republicans think you can run the Courthouse better than the Democrats have, you can do a damn sight better than I think you will. The Democrats want no office. They are like the man who had nothing to eat for so many years that he had no gut left. The Democrats have no hunger for office." Del Valle was defeated for the railroad sack and the damn scoundrel business."

Frank Howard said there never had been a Republican party. He proceeded to make fun of Blaine, and said: "People don't like me, what the devil I was working for. All honor to Curtis, Beecher, Schurz, the New York Times, Herald, and Harper's Weekly, and Nast's glorious cartoons." He quit, shouting "Hallelujah."

George S. Patton said that some mistaken parties had accused him of being blood-thirsty, but no man felt less so than he. He felt so happy that he could wrap the American flag around him and embrace the Porcupine. It is time for the memory of Sumter, Gettysburg and Appomattox to be forgotten.

The meeting then adjourned with cheers.

A Card.

Unitarians, Universalists, Swedenborgians, members of the "Christian Connexion," Independent friends and many connected with no church, but who believe in religious sunshine and gladness—in the "spirit" more than in the "letter"—together with a large, a thoroughly conscientious and a rapidly increasing class who hold that true manliness is a primary element of true Godliness, will be happy to hear that Prof. Allen, of Harvard University, one of the ripest scholars, the purest, most genial, most liberal spirits in the American pulpit, will preach in Bryson Hall today, at 11 a. m. Bryson Hall is in the next block south of Nadeau, and public religious services will hereafter be held there every Sunday morning. Persons interested will please bear in mind this whole general announcement.

A New Strike.

A private letter from Quijotoa gives account of a new strike there which has produced no little excitement. A mile and a half north of the Peer mine an eleven inch vein of chlorides has been discovered in a four-foot ledge, and the pay streak has held out for a depth of 20 feet. Specimens of the ore from the vein which were shown a TIMES reporter yesterday are remarkably rich.

The work of development of the bonanza mines progresses slowly. Los Angeles will reap a rich harvest from these mines.

Death's Doings.

Daniel McCarty dropped dead from heart disease at the new depot yesterday. The coroner's inquest decided that he died from natural causes. He is from New England.

A blacksmith who lived with John Wilson, the blacksmith, on San Pedro street, died suddenly yesterday afternoon. An inquest will be held at 11 a. m. to-day.

Runaway Horse.

Yesterday afternoon a horse on Spring street, attached to a buggy, took fright, and breaking loose from the hitching post, dashed down Spring to Commercial, and out on Los Angeles to Aliso street, where the animal was captured by Officer Sanchez, who had followed close on horseback. The horse and buggy were uninjured. They are the property of a man by the name of Arnold.

The Raymond Excursion.

The Raymond excursionists, to the number of 78, (whose names have already been printed in the TIMES) arrived in Los Angeles yesterday noon. Of these 43 were quartered at the Pico house and 35 at the St. Elmo.

Purse Snatcher.

James Thompson was held to answer yesterday by Justice Morgan under $1000 bail before the Superior Court on a charge of robbery. Thompson snatched a purse out of a lady's hand on the corner of Spring and Second streets.

Deer and Antelope.

There were shipped to Porter Bros. & Co. six deer and one antelope from Flagstaff, Arizona. No sooner had they arrived than P. B. & Co. were notified that in case they attempted to dispose of the game they would be arrested for having game in their possession, whereupon they telegraphed to the consignors informing them of the fact, and yesterday they received a telegram to give the meat away. As a result the Sister of Charity School and the Orphan's Home were each the happy recipients of a fine venison. Parties shipping deer by express out of season will hereafter have to pay express charges. Directions have been telegraphed to the Territory by the Express Company not to receive any venison for shipment in here—the open season closed November 1st.

The Result of a Wager.

His Honor Justice Ranney was a victim last night at the Democratic jubilee. He and Colonel Hall, feeling sure that Blaine would win, wagered with Ruxton, County Surveyor, and Geo. J. Denis that if Blaine was elected the two Democrats should ride in the Republican procession, but that if Cleveland won then the two Republicans should take part in the Democratic procession. Ranney's word is as good as his bond on any question, and therefore when called upon he presented himself and occupied a conspicuous place in the line. It may be the Democrats will yet have to act as brevet Republicans and march in the ranks.

People's Store.

This immense dry goods emporium was filled last evening with an army of customers, and there was no Gila monster to attract attention, either. The establishment did a thriving cash business. One thing is certain, and that is the proprietors of the People's Store know how to use printers' ink.

Holstein Cattle.

William Niles a week ago received a car load of extra choice Holstein cattle from New York and Massachusetts. The Holsteins originated in Holland, and are famous as a superior breed of very large cattle.
